What About the Bonus?
Alice Longworth Writes.
Wall St. Totters Up.

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

GOV. ROOSEVELT is urged "to come out and say what he thinks about paying the soldiers bonus now." How would the following reply do, from Gov. Roosevelt, or any other?

The government took those men and shipped them abroad when it needed them. It didn't postpone taking them for several years as it now wants to postpone paying the bonus. It took them without notice or delay, although it wasn't convenient for many of them to go at that particular time.

If the government is able it ought to act with the bonus as it did with conscription and pay the bonus now, as promptly as it conscripted those veterans.

This, of course, subject to the government's actual ABILITY to find and to pay the money.

IF INVESTIGATION of the Treasury, something of a mystery to the average citizen, shows that the government hasn't got the money, and can't get it, then the payment must be postponed.

But if the government can pay now what it must pay eventually, instead of waiting, it should hand over the bonus now, when the soldiers need money, as the government needed men in the war.

PAYMENT WOULD put two thousand million dollars into immediate circulation. It would start purchases of every conceivable article in every imaginable store, creating a demand for new goods and increasing the payrolls of factories.

No dollar does any real good until it finds its way into the pocket of some man or woman that will spend it, just as no irrigation water does any good until it finds its way to the root of some plant.

MRS. ALICE Roosevelt Longworth, daughter of the late Theodore Roosevelt, and, as a matter of course, very able, the genius of fathers, as Galton shows, being inherited by the daughters, writes on politics for Mr. Cyrus H. K. Curtis.

She will vote for Mr. Hoover, not for her "fifth cousin," Gov. Roosevelt. She would vote for President Hoover even if she were a Democrat.

VERY INTERESTING is Mrs. Longworth's reference to "the king of the wood at Nemi."

The apt quotation shows that Mrs. Longworth has read and absorbed the twelve volumes of Frazer's The Golden Bough. You ought to read that book, or, if you have not time for twelve volumes, get the abridged edition.

"The king of the wood at Nemi" was in charge of a tree that had one bough of gold. At the end of the year, whoever could go into the woods and kill him got his job.

Mrs. Longworth thinks our presidential fights every four years, and the effort now to show that "Hoover is responsible for bad times," are as foolish as the ancient belief about that golden bough and other things.

Mr. Curtis might persuade Mrs. Longworth to write a series of articles on The Golden Bough, popularizing the "Deep Stuff" which is A. B. C. to her, with other articles about Frazer's Adonis, Attis, Osiris, etc.

Frazer's book Totemism and Exogamy, dealing with strangely savage primitive laws against marriage within your own tribe, would interest the Roosevelts particularly. Under those old laws, Gov. Roosevelt could not have married his present wife, who is Mrs. Longworth's first cousin and Gov. Roosevelt's fifth cousin, a relationship so distant that we take no account of it.

AN ENGLISHMAN, supposed to know more about economics, and even our own American business, than anybody else, says a rise in Wall Street prices is important to the prosperity of the whole world. He only hopes the recent rise has not depended too much on European investments, or on political-financial manipulating here in connection with the coming election.

THOSE WHO believe that this wise Britisher is as wise as he is supposed to be, will be delighted to hear that stocks went up yesterday, from one to seven points, wheat and cotton going ahead, railroads strong.

Also, if you are one hundredth part as wise as that Englishman, YOU WON'T GAMBLE. If you want to know what gambling does, look around you.

IRELAND LOST a fine old lady and her oldest inhabitant yesterday, when the Hon. Katherine Plunket died. On her birthday, the ninth of next November, she would have been one hundred and twelve years old. Daughter of the second Baron Plunket, Lord Bishop of Tuam, her mother was the daughter of John W. Foster, last speaker of the Irish House of Commons.

More important, Lady Plunket spent her life trying to be of use to Ireland, particularly in selling here and elsewhere Irish cloths, laces and other products of Irish women.

Her age and energy demonstrate the wonderful power that is in the Celtic race.

President En Route to Cleveland to Speak On Unemployment

President Hoover and his campaign entourage were moving through Western Pennsylvania today, speeding toward Cleveland, O., where the President tonight will make the second major speech of his campaign for re-election.

Determined to hold Pennsylvania within the folds of the Republican party, Mr. Hoover was to make frequent back platform speeches as his train moved throught his section.

M'KEESPORT STOP

Taking cognizance of the considerable Roosevelt sentiment in Allegheny County, the Chief Executive planned to speak at stopovers in McKeesport at 2:20 p. m., at Braddock at 2:35 p. m. and at Zelienople at 3:58 p. m.

The presidential train will not stop at Pittsburgh, but will follow the Junction route to New Castle.

The McKeesport delegation includes Dr. F. Thoburn Nason, president of the People's City Bank; George Hitchens, of the National Tube Company, and G. V. Parkins, of the McKeesport Tin Plate Company.

When the special train arrived in McKeesport, 50 Pittsburgh patrolmen, under the personal direction of Supt. Peter P. Walsh, and the entire force of Allegheny County detectives was to form a special honorary bodyguard to the President.

President Flayed by Garner

By SEYMOUR BERKSON
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—Speaker John N. Garner, Democratic vice presidential nominee, last night portrayed President Hoover to a nation-wide radio audience as an inventor of economic myths hiding the true causes of America's recent plight.

It was the Texan's first major campaign speech and he concentrated his fire on Hoover's speech in Des Moines, Ia., October 5, when the President outlined a 12-point program for farm relief and attacked the Democratic tariff policy.

Garner characterized the program as Hoover's 1932 edition of his 1928 prosperity myth and challenged the President's contention that America's economic crisis originated in Europe—a

DETECTIVES GET DEATH THREAT

Bullet Accompanies Note Sent 'Four Horsemen'

Accompanied by a rifle bullet, a threat of death to the raiding "Four Horsemen" of the county detectives was received today through the mail.

The four, who have been active in recent weeks raiding numbers racket quarters, moonshine resorts and clamping the lid on all kinds of law violation, in accordance with directions of Judge Frank P. Patterson, were ordered to leave the state within 24 hours.

A note on brown paper in letters half an inch high was wrapped around the long range bullet, which came in a small package addressed to County Detective Thomas Calig.

The note read:

"Thomas Calig: If you and the other . . . of the Four Horsemen don't leave the state within 24 hours, these (referring to the bullet) will follow. You know why. Choose."

The missive was signed with a large "E."

Calig and the other detectives said they thought the letter the work of a crank or someone incensed over the raids.

SHOTS FIRED AS GUNMEN COW SCORE

Suspect in Flight 'Kidnaps' Family In Auto

A bandit gang today cowed three score patrons of the H. J. Heck market, 1614 Lowrie street, slugged the proprietor, herded seven clerks in a storage room, rifled three cash registered and escaped with upwards of $500. This was the second holdup of a crowded store in Pittsburgh in 12 hours.

Police arrested one of the alleged bandits, who they said, deserted by his companions in the get-away, commandered an auto in which a man, his wife and child were driving, and fired a shot through the windshield to give emphasis to his demands.

Few words were spoken in the holdup. One shot was fired when one of the victims started in pursuit.

STORE CROWDED

The store was crowded with Saturday morning shoppers when four or five men, the clerks are not sure how many, entered with drawn revolvers. One stood at each of the entrances on Lowrie street and ordered the crowd to keep quiet. A third man ordered the proprietor and clerks into the storage room in the rear.

Heck, the proprietor, was slow

BENCH VACANCY STIRS RIVALRY

Members of Allegheny County's political family today were speculating as to who will succeed Judge Joseph M. Swearingen, of Common Pleas Court, whose resignation was forwarded Gov. Pinchot last Tuesday. Announcement of the resignation came in a statement last night from members of the judge's family.

Judge Swearingen served 24 of his 77 years on the Allegheny County bench. Ill health is believed to have led him to resign his post. He has been confined to his home at 112 West Prospect avenue, Ingram.

The resignation was announced by members of the judge's family to refute unverified reports that the Bar Association would be asked to seek his resignation.

As word of the resignation spread, political leaders here divided their opinions as to the successor. It was generally believed District Attorney Andrew T. Park would be a likely candidate, but friends of Assistant County Solicitor Ralph H. Frank were positive Pinchot's Allegheny County supporters would look favorably upon the Solicitor.

He seemed to enjoy it, smiling and waving a hand in response to their cheers. It was observed that he wore one of the spotted red mufflers which he recently has made popular.

INSULL RETURN TO U. S. SEEN

By WILLIAM PARKER,
International News Service.

ATHENS, Oct. 15. — Samuel Insull, former Chicago power "czar," may return voluntarily to the United States to face his accusers.

From a reliable privte source, International News Service learned the ex-millionaire, indicted for embezzlement and larceny, is considering the possibility of returning to Chicago to answer the indictments after the presidential and Cook County elections.

This decision to delay definite action until after the elections, it was learned, has been promoted by Insull's conviction that the pressure now being applied to have him extradited is chiefly political.

Bandits Get $10,000 In Bronx Bank Raid

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—(INS.)—Six bandits raided a Bronx branch bank today, cowed employes with revolvers, and escaped with between $10,000 and $15,000.

The foray was made shortly after the branch of the Public National Bank at One Hundred and Sixty-ninth street and Morris avenue was opened. The first bandit walked in pretending he had a deposit to make. His comrades followed, lining up employes against a wall. Three bandits stood guard while the others went through the cages scooping up money.

LION HUNTERS' GUNS POISED

Suspect in Flight 'Kidnaps' Family In Auto

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—Despite protests of humane societies, Denver M. Wright, St. Louis manufacturer, today was prepared to stage his "synthetic" lion hunt in Southeast Missouri today.

Roaring and mauling each other, two young female lions, which Wright bought from a circus, were loaded into a truck here last night. Wright, accompanied by a nephew and a friend, started with them for the scene of the hunt.

Heavy rifles and a plentiful supply of ammunition were carried by Wright and his companions.

At Charleston, Mississippi County seat, Sheriff Jackson reiterated his determination to prevent the lions from being released. F. D. Hequembourg, game warden, planned to have volunteer riflemen surround the lions and shoot them down if members of the hunting party failed in their aim.

Poll Shows Intensity Of Iowa Campaign

By COLE E. MORGAN
Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—(Universal.)—This presidential race out in Iowa is getting to be nerve-wracking. For the last three weeks it has been exceedingly close.

It started out back in August on the first tabulation of returns in the nation-wide postcard poll of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph in co-operation with all the other Hearst morning, evening and Sunday papers in the United States, with Gov. Roosevelt polling approximately 4 to 3 of the Iowa ballots.

It went along from week to week with Roosevelt increasing his lead and maintaining this 4-to-3 ratio until the last week of September. Then there came a sudden change.

The last three weekly tabulations of Iowa ballots, totaling 3,827, has shown a difference of only seven between Hoover and Roosevelt. In that period, Hoover has drawn 1,910 and Roosevelt 1,917.

The returns tabluated September 30 divided 678 for Hoover to 677 for Roosevelt. On October 7, the tabulation showed 552 for Hoover and 556 for Roosevelt. Today's tabulation of this week's returns counted up 680 for Hoover and 684 for Roosevelt.

The week to week variation has ranged from one to four votes. Hoover getting one the best of it one week and Roosevelt four the best of it two weeks. It would be difficult to create a closer contest than this Iowa race.

Officer Checks Fleeing Suspect With Horse

Wheeling his horse in the path of a fleeing Negro robber suspect, Mounted Patrolman William Thompson captured the Negro in Cherry way today, as the man sought escape from a pursuing gas station attendant.

Edward Miller, 23, of 534 Marie street, Avalon employed at the Atlantic Refining Company's station, Boulevard of the Allies and Cherry way, said he saw the Negro leaving the office with a money envelope and gave chase.

At Central Station the Negro, giving the name of William Rice, of New York, was found, police said, to have the envelope containing $54.

Patrolman Thompson said:

"Give the credit for the arrest to my horse, Doctor Strong, not to me."

ROOSEVELT BRANDS G. O. P. STOCK LOSS YARN UNTRUE

HOOVER FRIEND CALLS CHARGE FALSEHOOD

Shows Profit Paid; Governor's Speech Here to Be Hot

By RAYMOND L. BORST
International News Service.

HYDE PARK, N. Y., Oct. 15.—With the aid of a Republican who intends to vote for President Hoover, Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt today had spiked charges made by Republican campaign speakers that he, as President of the United European Investors, Ltd., "advised the public to invest in German securities in 1922 as a result of which money was lost."

The Governor made public a letter from Edward S. Paine, New York attorney, which he is convinced completely refutes the G. O. P. charges. Paine was a member of the banking firm of William Schall & Co., which acted as financial advisers to Roosevelt's company.

PROFIT CITED

After pointing out that the stockholders in Roosevelt's company received $8 for every $2.50 which they invested, Paine wrote:

"Instead of this being, as is reported, a loss to American investors, it represented a substantial profit, in fact a large percentage of profit to each of the stockholders, all of whom were treated upon a basis of equality."

Saying he was a Republican and intended to vote for President Hoover, Paine added:

"I believe that fair play requires that I write you my understanding of the situation."

BONUS TALK AWAITED

Reports were current today Roosevelt may issue a statement within 48 hours defining his attitude on the soldier bonus.

He has let it be known, however, that if he does not make a statement on the bonus before leaving Tuesday for the Middle West and South, he will make it the subject of one of his speeches.

While the Governor has refused to give any indication how he feels at present toward the bonus, hints have been thrown out by some of his friends that he might declare for immediate payment to destitute veterans on the theory they would have to be cared for in any event this winter either by local, state or the federal government.

The Governor planned to start work today on the first major speech of his second campaign tour, which will be delivered next Wednesday night at Pittsburgh. Democratic leaders have advised him that he has an "excellent chance" of carrying Pennsylvania, and it is said he intends to "pack a lot of things" into the Pittsburgh speech.

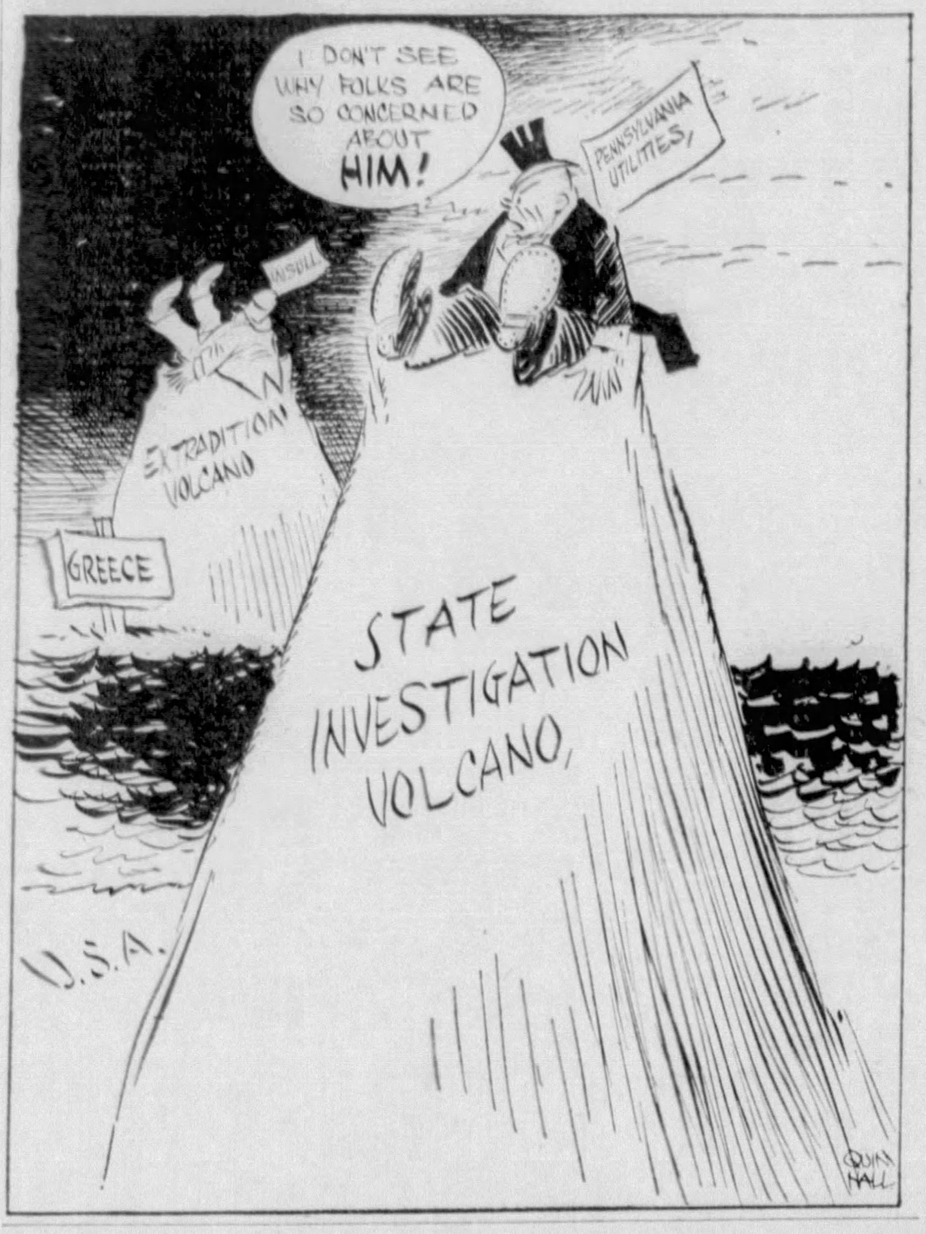
When There's Trouble at Home -:- By QUIN HALL



BANDITS HOLD UP CROWDED STORE

in complying and was hit on the forehead by a gun butt wielded by one of the bandits. Then the leader shouted:

"Nobody move. I'll shoot to kill."

While one of the bandits searched the pockets of the clerks in the rear room, another opened three cash registers and took out approximately $500. Then all of the mob fled, except one. He was busy in the rear of the store. Finding his companions had deserted him, he ran out.

Norman Schlachter, 24, one of the clerks, had left before him, and the robbers, entering their parked automobile, fired a shot at him, then sped away.

SEIZES AUTO

The deserted bandit ran down De Haven street, where George Hohman, his wife and daughter, of 1522 Valentine street, were entering their automobile. He jumped aboard and ordered them to drive to the city. His command was punctuated by a shot through the window.

Squeezing into the front seat, alongside of Mrs. Hohmann, the bandit said:

"Step on it, I'll not harm anybody."

Then he fired one shot through the door window and another under the hood of the auto.

He commanded:

"Drive like hell."

With that he jumped from the front seat to the rear occupied by Mary Hohmann, 10. The child, frightened, opened the door and jumped out, but the bandit would not permit the father and mother to stop. He directed the course to East Ohio and Chestnut streets.

He left the Hohman machine at Chestnut and Ohio streets and boarded a taxicab.

Hohman told Joseph Stewart, of 121 Fremont street, Mt. Oliver, of the attack, and Stewart followed to Fifth and Sixth avenues, where Traffic Officer Henry Tennmen arrested both taxi driver and passenger.

The passenger identified himself at Allegheny Police Station as Eugent Saldutte, 20, of 21 Welsh way, South Side. Police said a revolver with two discharged cartridges was found in the cab. Saldutte, police said had $15 in cash and a check for $10, said to have been taken from one of the clerks.

The clerks, Joseph Sibenac, Albert Beatty, Edward Ernest, Fred Schwartz, Thomas Lutty and John Scullt and Norman Schlachter, were asked to view the prisoner in the hope of identification.

35 HELD UP

Three wise-cracking bandits held up 35 customers, a manager, three clerks and the wife of the proprietor in Hirsh's drug store, 530 North Negley avenue, and escaped with $140 last night.

The bandits laughed and joked with their victims as they looted the cash register of $100 and the pockets of two customers.

From Lewis Werman, of 808 North Beatty street, they took $25 and from J. L. Donner, of 5515 Black street, $15. Another man they searched was Charles Frank, of 5518 Hays street, but obtained nothing.

The patrons, mostly women and children, were not molested.

Three bandits obtained $20 after holding up Peter McCann, of 821 Blossom way, an attendant in the Heyl Service Station, 2832 East Street, last night.

W. S. Gartside, of 526 Avery street, was attacked and robbed of a watch and chain valued at $80 and $4 in cash by a thug near his home last night.

Police in Harrison Township today sought two bandits who last night threatened with guns two proprietors of a barbecue and service station on Route 28 near Natrona Heights, seized $35 and left them bound with clothes line, in a back room.

Chester Chojnowski, 34, and his brother, Walter, 28, were the victims. They shook off their bonds after half an hour, but were prevented from summoning police for some time because the robbers had taken their automobile keys and they had no telephone.

DEMOCRATS SEE JOHNSON TURN CALIFORNIA

Bolt from Hoover May Decide Election, They Say

Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Democratic leaders today envisaged history repeating itself through California and Hiram W. Johnson promoting the election of a Democratic President.

Senator Johnson's refusal to be intimidated by Hoover Republicans and his blunt declaration that he could not and would not support President Hoover were viewed here as definitely placing California's 22 electoral votes in the Roosevelt column, toward which they were inclined.

The most conservative estimates of party managers—Democratic and Republican—on Senator Johnson's personal following among the Republicans of California was 100,000. That figure meant only those Progressive Republicans who would follow the Senator in any personal political step such as he took yesterday.

Taken with the powerful support accorded Gov. Roosevelt by the five Hearst newspapers in California, and the already greatly increased Democratic registration due to dissatisfaction with Hoover's policies in his own state, Democratic spokesmen asserted Johnson's repudiation of Hoover guaranteed Democratic success, not only in California but in other western states.

Democrats were jubilant. They were confident that the recent heroic efforts of Treasury Secretary Mills to save California for Hoover would come to naught.

Senator Swanson, of Virginia, chairman of the Democratic national senatorial campaign committee, said:

"The statement of Senator Johnson indicates that he is a man of courage and conviction and practices what he preaches.

"I am not surprised, considering the administration record of four years. The Senator's statement will add to the regard and esteem the country entertains for him as a man of fearless integrity."

for handshaking. His right hand was bandaged, due to a cut inflicted by a woman's ring while shaking hands in Washington, a few days ago.

As the President's train pulled into Martinsburg, the Martinsburg High School Band, apparently through an error, struck up one of Franklin D. Roosevelt's campaign songs, "Anchors Aweigh," to the amusement of some of the crowd of 2,000 persons.

The President, with Mrs. Hoover standing beside him, expressed pleasure at being in the state and appreciation for his welcome. Mrs. Hoover was presented with a boquet of flowers by a little girl.

APPLES FOR HOOVER

A basket of apples was given to the President by Martinsburg growers.

The presidential party includes Mrs. Hoover; Postmaster General Walter Brown, of Ohio; Lawrence Richey and Walter Newton, two of the President's secretaries; Michael Gallagher, Cleveland coal operator; Capt. Joel T. Boone, White House physician; Miss Myra McGrath, personal secretary to the President, and Miss Mildred Hall, Mrs. Hoover's secretary.

Meanwhile, in Cleveland one of the largest crowds in Ohio's history was gathering from all parts of the state and from many distant points in the nation to greet the President.

Flying and Marriage Don't Click, Ruth Says

RUTH ELDER . . . "YOU CAN'T MIX FLYING AND MARRIAGE"

Aviatrix Waits Third Divorce on Ranch Near Reno.

By CAROL CROSS
International News Service.

MAYBERRY RANCH, Reno, Nev., Oct. 15.—Matrimony and aviation don't "click" when a flier marries outside the flying profession.

Clothed in blue jeans and blue shirt, popular among dude ranchers of Reno's divorce colony, Ruth Elder, pretty and famous young aviatrix, expressed that opinion in an interview.

Miss Elder has taken a cottage at Mayberry Ranch, four miles west of Reno, and is enjoying a touch of western life while awaiting a Reno divorce from Walter Camp, Jr., New York motion picture producer and son of the late famous football coach. Camp is her third husband. She said:

"It's difficult for a woman to be both a wife and a flier unless she is married to some one interested in flying. I have found that the two things can't be reconciled and that's why I'm in Reno. My future plans are indefinite, but I do hope to get back into active flying because that is where I'm happiest."

While reluctant to discuss her domestic affairs in any way, Miss Elder said she doesn't expect to remarry. She said with a smile:

"Not while I'm conscious."

Her two previous marriages ended in the divorce courts of Alabama and Panama. Her first husband was C. E. Moody, a school teacher, and her second was Lyle Womack, son of a Panama hat manufacturer.

GARNER SCORES HOOVER ON SLUMP

Holds Administration Bungled Finances In Emergency

MISMANAGEMENT CHARGE

The Speaker declared that instead of Europe causing this country's crisis, federal deficits resulting from mismanagement of government finances disturbed American credit and started the avalanche.

He pointed out that the deficit for 1931 and 1932, originally estimated by the administration at $150,000,000, turned out to be nearly $4,000,000,000. Garner declared:

"The record shows that the administration was either hopelessly at sea as to the actual Treasury situation for two years or else deliberately concealed the true state of affairs, deceiving the country until concealment was no longer possible."

Analyzing President Hoover's 1928 program, Garner charged that several of the planks included in that program were instrumental in bringing about the financial debacle. He said:

"Financing loans to crippled countries (which Hoover's 1928 program recommended as a stimulus of foreign trade) was folly.

"Increasing tariffs (as provided by the Smoot-Hawley bill during Hoover's administration) destroyed foreign trade and made debt payment impossible.

"Errors in the delicate balance of taxes and spending caused fabulous losses and upset the stability of business."

'NEW EDITION OF MYTH'

Switching his attention from Hoover's 1928 pledge to his current campaign, Garner declared:

"In 1932, we have a new edition of the 1928 myth—something like:

" 'Last winter a wave of financial destruction rolled in from Europe until at its crisis our gold standard had two weeks to live. In spite of flank attacks by the Democratic Congress, the administration saved the day and came out with an exclusive program which has defeated the depression. Thank God for this Republican administration.' "

Garner continued:

"I hasten to disclaim any sarcasm. What I have just said was a fair paraphrase of the Des Moines speech."

The Speaker ridiculed as a false alarm Hoover's statement at Des Moines that the country was on the verge of going off the gold standard, declared it to be "a libel on the credit of the United States," and added:

"The difficulty was not in going off the gold standard. It was in going further on the gold standard."

Garner explained that all that was done was to pass a bill making American currency more flexible and pointed out that the bill "didn't create any gold."

BERATES HOOVER

He berated Hoover for taking credit for this legislation which Garner declared was framed by a Democratic Senator and Democratic Representative.

"The Republicans claim exclusive credit for the emergency laws of the last session of Congress. They list a lot of defeated bills and call them the 'Democratic program.'

"At Des Moines, it was said that Democrats controlled the policy of both House and Senate. Now on this state of facts I have only one appeal to make to the common sense of the country and that is a question:

"If the Democrats controlled the policy of both Houses, how could the enacted legislation be the exclusive program of the Republican administration and the defeated bills the exclusive program of the controlling Democratic Congress?"

CITES RECORD

The husky voice of the veteran Texan, who brought to his subject a background of 30 years in Congress, rose to crisp emphasis as he declared through the microphone before which he stood:

"The cold print of the record shows that on the very heart of the whole program — the balanced budget, the Democratic Congress did all that it was possible to do and that the Republican administration frustrated their action by supplying inaccurate and misleading estimates."

DEATH PENALTY URGED FOR SWEATBOX TORTURE GUARDS

FATE OF PAIR WILL REACH JURY TODAY

'Guilty' Verdict Is Asked on 'Hellish Convict System'

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Oct. 15.—(AP.)—Florida's penal system drew sharp criticism today as attorneys fired their final arguments in the trial of two former prison-camp officials in the sweatbox torture death of Arthur Maillefert, a young prisoner from New Jersey.

As the 11-day trial drew toward a close yesterday, Assistant State's Attorney Samuel B. Wilson urged the death penalty for Capt. George W. Courson and Guard Solomon Higginbotham, who are accused of responsibility for Maillefert's strangulation while confined in a punitive cell.

Such a verdict, he declared, would not only be a just judgment for the death of the prisoner, but on the "hellish convict system of Florida as well."

Only closing arguments and the charge of Judge George Couper Gibbs remained before the case could go to the jury today. A night session, planned last night, was cancelled when jurors said they were fatigued.

The state contends Maillefert was placed in the sweatbox for punishment for attempts to escape in such a weakened condition that he was hanged by the chain placed about his neck to force him to stand upright. The defense contends the young prisoner deliberately hanged himself rather than serve his nine-year sentence for robbery.

JILTED WOMAN BARES ARSON ATTEMPT

Spurned by Man, She Charges Plot to Fire Apartment

A spurned woman early today caused the arrest of a married man friend in connection with an alleged plot to fire an apartment at 911 Shawnee street to collect on a fire insurance policy, according to Center avenue police.

The woman, Lena Levine, 20, of 1616 Forside place, told Capt. Thomas F. Gross, he says, that she agreed to the plot on her sweetheart's promise to leave another woman with whom he had been living in the Shawnee street apartment for the past 10 months.

TWO ATTEMPTS FAIL

Two attempts to fire the dwelling failed, the Levine woman told police.

The man, Samuel Stolofsky, alias Stahl, 32, of Brooklyn, N.Y., and the Levine woman are being held for investigation by the bomb and arson squad.

In her alleged confession, which she signed as Lena Greenfield, she said Stolofsky has a wife in Brooklyn. Shortly after his arrival here he made the acquaintance of the woman with whom he is alleged to have been living. She is the mother of two children. According to Capt. Gross, Lena added:

"Three weeks ago he promised to get rid of this other woman if I would set fire to his apartment. He told me, 'That will help.'

ATTEMPT FAILS

"That attempt failed. When he found out about it he scolded me. Last Thursday he came to me and said he was driving to Cleveland with the other woman and her two children and told me to try it again. He said he had placed a can of benzine in the apartment.

"I poured some out on two rugs and set fire to them, but the fire went out. When he returned from Cleveland he scolded me again but made a date with me for last night. He failed to show up."

BOY MAY SOLVE TRIPLE KILLING

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., Oct. 15.—(AP.)—Solution of Connellsville's triple slaying, police said today, hinges largely on the recovery of Billy Tressler, 9, critically injured by the blows of a killer who clubbed his mother, sister and grandmother to death in their home Tuesday night.

While funeral services were being held yesterday for Mrs. Nellie Tressler, 28, her mother, Mrs. Amanda Harden, 62, and Mrs. Tressler's daughter, Sadie, 11, Billy regained consciousness.

Unaware that his mother, Mrs. Tressler, and the other two members of the family were killed in the attack, Billy gave officers a few details of the crime, furnishing the names of two men.

From his mumbled responses to their questions, police gained the opinion that if the child recovers he may be able to supply them with sufficient information to clear up the case.

Meanwhile, police are holding Clyde Harden, 28, brother of Mrs. Tressler, Philip Renda, 50, her suitor, and George Lohr, 39, a former suitor.

LAW PURSUES 'ROYAL' GYPSY

CHICAGO, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—Michigan officials appeared in court yesterday seeking the extradition of Mrs. Annie Bimbo, daughter-in-law of Tinnee Bimbo, self-styled king of the Chicago gypsies. Mrs. Bimbo was charged with larceny.

State Attorney Charles Sanford, of Muskegon, Mich., told the court Mrs. Bimbo recently gave a phrenology reading for Olaf Zachriason, also of Muskegon. In the course of the reading she had Zachriason tie his life savings of $1,000 in a handkerchief. When he opened it two days later he found 31 one dollar bills.

Mrs. Bimbo was not in court. An attorney presented a doctor's statement saying she was in New York and too ill to appear in court.

PLANE SCREEN TO BE ASKED

Some form of a wire inclosure for "parked" airplanes, to prevent injury to passengers by propellers, will be recommended at the Coroner's inquest into the death of Frederick Howe, Brooklyn shoe salesman, who walked into the propeller of a T. W. A. plane at the county airport Wednesday.

Coroner W. J. McGregor made this known today after spending yesterday afternoon at the airport with Manager H. S. Long and aviation experts. He has not yet set a date for the inquest.

Such an inclosure, as we discussed with the Coroner yesterday, would prevent a recurrence of the accident in which Howe ran under a mail platform and directly into a propeller while chasing his hat, it was pointed out.

Terming the accident "unavoidable," Dr. McGregor said he believed the act of going after one's hat is an involuntary action and is done in spite of warnings.

Wynn's Fire Chief Role On Air to Aid Fund

Ed Wynn, "the perfect fool," whose antics on stage and radio have amused millions, will aid the Welfare Fund by a special performance here October 25.

Wynn's musical show, "The Laugh Parade," plays at the Nixon Theater the week of October 24. Wynn, who omits his show on Tuesday nights to play his part as the Fire Chief over the NBC network, usually hurries back to New York to broadcast. But with Pittsburgh so far from the metropolis, he conceived the idea of broadcasting from the Nixon, charging a nominal price for admission, and contributing it to the Welfare Fund.

The plan immediately was accepted by the management, officials of the company sponsoring the Tuesday night broadcasts, city officials and heads of the Welfare Fund.

Don Voorhees' Orchestra, which supplies the musical features of the radio program in New York will broadcast its part of the program from NBC studios in New York.

A committee appointed by Mayor Kline will decide what price will be asked for tickets.

Listening In On Studio Gossip

Hal Kemp, the young southern maestro, who held forth at the Urban room here not so long ago and now is being featured at the Blackhawk Cafe in Chicago, becomes a Columbia network feature following arrangements completed between CBS and MCA officials. Kemp, who achieved popularity overnight in the mid-western city through his interpretation of rhumbas, tangos and novelties, is scheduled to go on the air from 12:30 to 1 a. m. each Friday and Sunday night . . . Phil Ohman and Victor Arden, the veteran piano team of radio, with Bert Challis, night club artist, as soloist, and Phil Rapp, singing and dancing comedian, as master of ceremonies, opens a new series of variety presentations over NBC-WEAF Sunday, October 23.

Mr. Kemp

Beginning Monday, the Home Circle program moves to a 6:45 spot in response to an increasing number of requests from men and women who have been unable to hear it at its present hour. With the change, Emily Post returns, replacing Madame Sylvia. Albert Payson Terhune, Bruce Barton, John Erskine and Heywood Broun remain on their usual schedule.

Although Lanny Ross has never introduced one of his own compositions, he has an orchestration prepared and soon will sing a selection that he composed about three years ago, "Now I'm in Love."

Loren was arrested September 1 when police quoted him as saying he killed his brother because he was "always taking my girls from me." Miss Woods was slain, according to the purported confession, because Loren was afraid she would talk.

CARE OF CHILD CRIPPLES CUT

HARRISBURG, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—The State Department of Welfare's orthopedic unit announced that abnormal needs of general relief programs has created the danger of an impending collapse of much of the assistance being given crippled children.

Field workers of the orthopedic unit reported crippled children in many sections of the state are not receiving treatment, largely through local inability to obtain the necessary funds.

In Mayfair

—With—

Patricia Pitt

Hot Springs, Va., is always popular, but just now when autumn is at its most golden moment, the resort is having a glorious day.

And of course some of our Mayfarians are there for the gaities of the season. This past week the big drawing card was the twentieth annual fall golf tournament.

George H. Flinn, Jr., of the Fox Chapel Club, was second to Fay Ingalls, of Hot Springs, in the qualifying round medal in the men's tournament at the Cascades course, have you heard. And other low scorers in the qualifying round was Raymond Ford Moreland, also of the Fox Chapel Golf Club.

The Morelands and Mr. Flinn were active socially, too. The Morelands entertained in honor of Mrs. W. Terrell Johnson, Mrs. Moreland's mother.

Active Socially

The George H. Clapps, of Sewickley, are planning to arrive shortly for their annual visit. And their daughter, Mrs. William Welch Collin, Jr., will accompany them, as usual.

Capt. and Mrs. Cyrus R. Miller, who have always regarded Hot Springs with favor, have arrived. And they were guest of honor at a luncheon party given by the Jerome Napoleon Bonapartes, of New York.

The guests included Robert Livingstone Beeckman, former Governor of Rhode Island, and other notables.

That incurable globe-trotter, Mrs. Oliver S. Hershman, is going to pay Pittsburgh a visit. She'll arrive Monday in New York on the Bremen, and come on to her home town a little later.

* * *

The active Woman's Exchange is planning another sale, this time a cookie sale. Mrs. William B. Trainer, chairman of the home cooking department, will direct this one-day sale of all sorts of cookies.

CORDED WEAVING FEATURED IN THE FAVORED FALL FABRICS

Sketched in Paris

Paris Bureau,
Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

PARIS, Oct. 15.—There is a distinct corduroy influence in this winter's Paris fashions. Wool, silk, velvet and mixtures all show a tendency to corded weaving. It is not confined only to clothes for sports wear, as formerly, but appears in clothes of all varieties. Many of the newest evening dresses are of a corded velvet which approaches corduroy in weave, but is sheer in texture.

CORDED WOOLENS, launched in Paris last season, are already established as classic materials. They are favorites for the sturdy type of coats or suit which is destined for wear in difficult weather. Dressmakers like the possibilities they offer in design, for a slight change in the direction of the cords, by means of adroit cutting, can work a whole design into a costume without the addition of any ornament.

MAGGY BESACON DE WAGNER, the young designer who plans all the clothes for the house of Maggy-Rouff, makes frequent use of corded materials in her new collection. She likes them especially well for furless winter suits to be worn with sweaters.

ONE OF these is sketched today—a model in dark brown wool whose weave follows the corduroy line in exaggerated cordings. The jacket and skirt are entirely without decoration and follow more or less classic lines. The jacket has big square arm-eyes and visible seams; the skirt has several deep box plaits.

THE SWEATER-BLOUSE, by contrast, is vivid with color—red, brown, white, blue, green and red all included in its stripings. Belt and collar are of open knitting, in all the six colors, but the square buttons down the front fastening are brown.

Miss Louise Borland, of the Pittsburgh District Dairy Council, will talk on "Teeth" at the Semple P. T. A. meeting Thursday afternoon and will supplement her talk with a mannequin playlet. Dr. Robert T. Hodgson, school physician, also is to speak.

Turner School unit will hold its October meeting on Tuesday and will hear W. C. Graham, superintendent of schools, speak on "Learning," and Mrs. Olga F. Morrow, soloist, accompanied by Mrs. P. C. Weinkauf.

TELL IT TO SALLY -:- -:- Follow This Unusual Feature Day by Day -:- -:- By SALLY MARTIN

It Isn't Fair to Try to Make Others Fit Our Ideals

He's a grand guy, kind, generous, steady—in short, the answer to a maiden's prayer—but—

He smokes! And he won't give it up even for Lucille, although he claims he loves her madly.

How about it?

Should she expect him to? And is she right to keep on nagging him because he won't?

In other words, is it up to a sweetie or a wife to say what the big boy shall do, and to slap him down if he won't mind?

Or has a gent a right to his own li'l personal peccadillos, so long as they don't actually hurt her?

Lucille's beginning to wonder herself.

"Dear Sally:

"I am faced with a secret problem that I would like to share with you and have your opinion on.

"I was raised in a very strict family where no one smoked, and as a result I have a hatred for smoking and hate to see anyone do it. For four years now I have gone steady with a wonderful fellow, and last year he started smoking. Naturally, I hate it, and I keep nagging him about it all the time. I tell him that if his love for me is so great then he should quit it for my sake, but he says he won't—that if it were hurting me in any way he would quit in a minute, but he doesn't see how it can hurt me any, so he is keeping on.

"Am I selfish not to let him have his smoking if he enjoys it? Or isn't his love so big, after all, when he won't give it up because I want him to?

DISAPPOINTED IN HIM

"This problem has made me think a great deal lately, and I wonder what you think of it. Maybe I am too narrow-minded about worldly things. Is it too much for me to demand that he stop it?

"He is so kind to me and to his mother, and has such a wonderful disposition, and yet—I hate to see him get like the rest of the mob. I chose him because he was so different, and now I am rather disappointed. Should I think of his pleasure before mine? Or am I right? I will appreciate your reaction to this letter. "LUCILLE."

What's my reaction?

My reaction is that you're being a little busybody, youngster, and trying to dictate about something that's none of your business.

The fact that you love this man—that you have built an impossibly perfect picture of him in your own mind—doesn't give you any right to own him or boss him, or to interfere with his personal actions.

NOTHING TO WORRY ABOUT

You'd be a mighty silly little girl if you let yourself get the jitters, and fuss with a chap who is plainly 100 per cent man, just because he didn't live up to your own private notions.

Whether a man smokes or not is up to him. If he gambled, or drank to excess, or spent his money like a drunken sailor, or was a mean and stingy tightwad, that would be something for you to worry over; because, if you married such a man those traits of character would be bound to make you suffer. But just now you're being a plain sap, and I don't blame the big boy for not falling for your notions.

And speaking of his love "not being big enough" because he won't—

Let me tell you this, sister. Unless your love is big enough to keep hands off, and let him be himself and manage his own personal life and habits, you'd better cut out all marriage plans right now and stay single for life.

For married ladies with notions like yours are a Pain-in-the-Neck to everyone—including themselves.

'THE WAY TO HIS HEART'

Drawn by Nell Brinkley

Bill submits himself to an experiment—double exposure to the very dangerous atmosphere of Nina and Nancy—their charming and very different presences. Later to be tested and listened to by Doc. Cupid.

Nina is flighty and gay, comet-like, wears clothes with careless flair—really carefully thought out before going out to conquer, is sleek as a hazelnut, made-up like the loveliest close-up of the prettiest star you've ever seen in the flickers, a devotee of lightness of mind and diversion, the serious things of life there somewhere but tucked deeply away that Bill can never get a look at them. Nina believes that the way to a man's heart is by way of beauty and grace, a listening attitude, cosmetics and clothes.

Nancy is fair too, slim and amiable. She is a bit serious about children and the rights and wrongs of things. What beauty she has is kept shining and clean, but the rouge-pot lasts an eternity with her, and she forgets to lip-red even when she is advised to. Nancy cannot wear an evening gown with the dash of a French model—she just wears it like a nice, good American girl who is slightly self-conscious would. Nancy believes that the way to a man's heart is by the way of goodness and kindness—and a grand cake and home-made biscuits. And can Nancy cook!

What do you think? You other Nancys and Ninas.

Bill, undergoing the cardiac examination to see which has made his heart go bump, looks to me like he had a TWO-WAY heart.—NELL BRINKLEY.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

Loyalty

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have been going with a young man, let's call him Bob, for five months. On a recent evening, Mary (a friend of mine) joined us for a ride, during which time Mary asked Bob for a cigaret and a cocktail.

Bob invited us to his apartment for the cocktail, and we went. Bob and Mary had a few drinks and Mary leaned on Bob's shoulder, and he started stroking her hair, kissing her and being rather attentive. I felt like a third party, so I asked to be taken home. Mary remained at the apartment awaiting Bob's return, while he was to drive me home.

I told Bob what I thought of him, not in very nice words, either, whereupon Bob said it was my fault, that I had no right to invite a third party. Did I act out of order, or was Bob to blame? S.

What mean spirited vampires these gals can be . . . can't they? . . . when a man and a cocktail are concerned. To such a girl, good taste counts for nothing. Manners count for nothing. Loyalty counts for nothing. Friendship counts for nothing. The respect of a new acquaintance and the devotion to an old friendship count for nothing.

It's a trite thing to say, but oh so true, that under a circumstance such as this, the real nature of the person is revealed in an unmistakable way. A girl who will act as ridiculously as this, so disloyally, is—a girl who will act as ridiculously as this, so disloyally. And that's all there is to it.

But you're taking a wrong tack, my dear girl, if you think that you can get anywhere discussing it with the man in question. From time immemorial women have tried to do this, and I doubt if they have gotten very far, ever. You see yourself what a flimsy excuse Bob gave—you shouldn't have invited a friend to come with you. Naturally two people can't go through life living only for and with themselves . . . never "inviting a third party." If a man or a woman can't be decent and friendly and loyal when another person is with them . . . their sense of decency and friendship and loyalty is weak and tottering indeed.

We are, then, left only with the alternative with which we are always left in choosing, or in choosing to keep our friends—what we demand in friends, and what we refuse to accept in friends. And by this I don't mean unreasonable demands, picayune demands, trivial demands, but a broad-minded attitude of the qualities without which there can be no reality in friendship. And the greatest of these is Loyalty!

It's a pretty cruel world when a girl is made to go through this kind of profoundly embarrassing and grueling experience, and her choice of what to do afterward is a difficult one. It depends on more things than any outsider has a right to judge about . . . only she can make the decision. But remember that "The mark of rank in nature is capacity for pain" . . . and so be dignified and measured and sure about what you decide to do or to say. Especially be careful about what you say!

Wedding Attire

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1—I am being married next month. The ceremony will take place at the parsonage in the evening. I wish to wear a white dress, but will not have a veil. What could I wear in place of a veil?

2—Also about gloves. Shall I wear them, and if so, about what length should I get. R.

1—It would be in the best form if you wear a hat with your white dress. It might be an interesting kind of evening hat, of a mode suitable to the mode of your dress.

2—It wouldn't be necessary to wear gloves.

Contract Bridge -:- HOW TO PLAY and HOW TO WIN

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

A Game Developed From Passed Hands

The following hand, played at Rubber Bridge, by Messers. Waldemar von Zedtwitz and Theodore A. Lightner against two expert players, is one of exceptional interest, in that, after being doubled for penalties in a bid of only one, Mr. Lightner found himself plunged by his partner into free bid for game in a new suit.

South—Dealer.

Both sides vulnerable; East-West 80 on score.

	♠ K 9 7 2 ♡ 8 6 5 3 2 ◇ — ♣ A Q J 4
♠ Q J 10 4 ♡ 10 ◇ K Q 10 7 4 ♣ 7 5 2	North West East South	♠ 8 5 3 ♡ A K 4 ◇ A 5 3 ♣ 9 8 6 3
	♠ A 6 ♡ Q J 9 7 ◇ J 9 8 6 2 ♣ K 10

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	Pass	1 ♣ (1)
1 ◇	Double (2)	1 ♠ (3)	Pass
Pass	2 ♣ (4)	Pass (5)	Pass
2 ♡ (6)	Pass	4 ♡ (7)	Double (8)
Pass	Pass	Pass (9)

1—Although East's hand is unfavorable in its lack of playing strength, it has 3 honor-tricks, and is well above average strength in high cards. (It has an Ace in place of a Queen and a Knave.) Defensively, it is strong, as the tricks are in short suits. Since both opponents have passed, a game for them seems improbable. East, therefore, feels that in view of his part-score, he is risking only a part-score for opponents, as against a game or possible penalty in his favor if he opens the bidding. What to bid, however, presents a problem. As a vulnerable bid of notrump is usually most undesirable, he decides to bid his weak four-card suit as the lesser of two evils.

2—A Penalty Double. North and South are vulnerable, and a bad set at even one diamond is indicated.

3—Mr. von Zedtwitz decides to try the spades first, and defend the rubber once more by bidding two hearts, if necessary.

4—West's singleton heart and three trumps seem to insure the bid of two clubs. A Double of one spade does not offer enough to compensate for giving up the rubber. West has no way of foreseeing the coming storm.

5—Mr. von Zedtwitz believes he can defeat two clubs; consequently, he does not defend further.

6—Mr. Lightner is reasonably safe in this bid, as he knows that if it does not suit his partner, they have a refuge in spades. Mr. von Zedtwitz will understand from his partner's pass of his spade bid, followed by a Rebid in hearts, that South has support for him.

7—Even though he knows South's bidding is defensive, in view of his freak holding and tremendous support for hearts, Mr. von Zedtwitz cannot resist a try for game.

8—Doubles of free game bids by strong opponents on top tricks are always doubtful, because in their bidding the opponents must be counting on losing these tricks. However, it does seem that four hearts should be beaten in view of West's bidding.

9—Mr. von Zedtwitz carefully considers a Redouble, but since much of partner's strength might be in diamonds, the Redouble would hardly be sound.

West made the correct lead of a heart, to prevent as many ruffs of diamonds by Dummy as possible. East continued the second and third rounds of hearts. It is apparent that four is a laydown. By a tricky play, however, it was possible to make five. South led the Ten of clubs and finessed it—merely to annoy the opponents—then played the Ace and two more rounds of clubs, on which he discarded a diamond and a spade! West, fooled by the spade discard, also let go a spade. South then played the Ace of spades, ruffed a diamond in Dummy, played the King and another spade, which he ruffed with his last trump, and the spade in Dummy hand was good.

Five-odd—one over the contract—was the fortunate result.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Mrs. Culbertson will be glad to answer any specific question on bidding or play sent in by readers. Address her in care of this newspaper, inclosing a three-cent stamped self-addressed envelope.

TODAY'S QUESTION:

North made an Opening two-heart bid and East passed. What should South have bid on the following hand?

♠ Q 9 8 5 3 ♡ K 9 ◇ 9 7 3 ♣ 10 6 4

Answer: Two notrump. The spade suit is not biddable, nor is there adequate trump support for partner's heart bid.

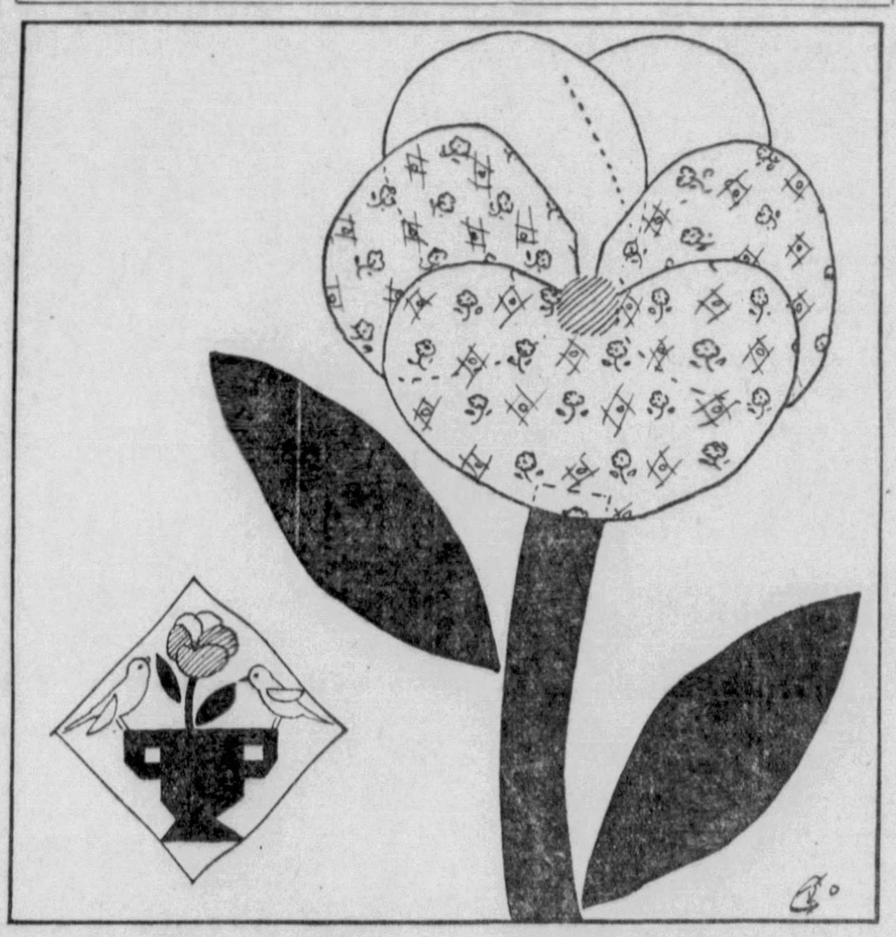
Nancy Page Quilt Club -:- -:- By Florence La Ganke



Garden Bouquet Quilt -- Block No. 8 -- The Pansy

A DIRECTION LEAFLET that will aid in making the Garden Bouquet Quilt will be sent free to any reader sending a stamped, addressed envelope to Nancy Page in care of this paper.

"I want to make a purple pansy." "I don't, I want a yellow one." "Not for me, I want to make a reddish brown." Thus spoke the members of the Nancy Page Quilt Club.

I don't see why each one of you can't make the pansy the color you please. Your choice is dependent on the scraps of material you have and on the color you chose for the flowers close to it. If you made a red-orange nasturtium you scarcely want to repeat those tones in the flower next to it. Look your pieces over while I tell you how we will make this flower.

First get the urn block ready, the pattern for that was given much earlier. It is the pieced triangular block which is the lower half of a diamond measuring 12½ by 12½.

The upper part of the triangle, 17½ by 12½ by 12½, is the piece of white on which the pansy and the two birds are appliqued.

The patterns for the birds were given earlier. They may be appliqued in spare time ahead of each new flower.

Or, if you are varying the color of the birds to match or contrast with the color of the flower you will want to wait until you see what the flower is going to be and until you decide what colors you will make it. Once that is decided the rest is simple.

Trace the outline of the flower lightly in place on the upper triangle. This is not necessary. It simplifies the placement of the flower later, but with the small guide inset given each week it is often omitted.

After the pattern, with its accompanying directions, has been cut from the paper trace the flower and leaves and stem onto light weight cardboard.

Now cut out the pattern and you have cardboard cutting pieces.

Lay these on the materials and cut out the cloth. Be sure to allow one-quarter of an inch on all sides. This is basted under and pressed. And is done before the flowers are appliqued.

In making the stem use bias tape in green. Other material may be used. If this is done, cut the stem on the bias and cut the material twice as wide as the finished stem will be. Turn raw edges back until they meet, baste and press.

Be sure that all materials are color fast and soft and easily stitched. If the flower comes too close to the head of the birds increase the length of the stem slightly. This raises the flower and gives more design in the upper part of triangle.

Work the eye of the pansy with fast color embroidery cotton. Use what is called the satin stitch, just one thread laid close beside another.

When the birds and flower design are finished the eighth block is ready for the quilt. This finishes the second row of flowers across the quilt. The large white diamonds are teamed in between the patterned diamonds in the same fashion as was suggested when the wild rose block was finished.

How to Keep Well

By DR. ROYAL S. COPELAND

Danger No Longer Seen in Mastoid Operation

Mastoid disease is one of the most feared ailments of the human family, particularly of childhood. Parents dread the disease because they fear the operation which may become necessary.

Dr. Copeland

Acute mastoiditis is an acute inflammation found within the mastoid bone that forms the bony prominence easily felt behind the ear. Within this bone is the mastoid antrum and perhaps a multitude of smaller cells or spaces, communicating with the middle ear.

The middle ear is connected with the nose through the Eustachian tube, and the prevalence of this disease has been attributed to the negligence of common colds and other infections of the nose and throat.

Inflammation of the mastoid is caused by an infection that usually travels from the nose or throat through the Eustachian tube. It is commonly seen after influenza, pneumonia and other infectious diseases and it may follow a severe infection of the tonsils or adenoids.

The attack comes on suddenly, but as a rule it is preceded by a severe earache. The earache usually occurs four or five days before the mastoid becomes involved. Within a few days there is a discharge from the ear and the pain disappears, but the pain returns when the discharge from the ear suddenly stops.

The afflicted person is restless, complains of great pain behind the ear and runs a high fever. If examined carefully, a swelling is noticed behind the ear. Though this sign is characteristic of acute mastoiditis, it may not always be present. The skin over the mastoid bone is red and painful when pressed.

In very young children it is often difficult to diagnose mastoiditis. This is unfortunate, for delay in certain cases is dangerous. In doubtful cases X-ray pictures of the mastoid bone should be made. They are of value but are not always definite, for mastoiditis may be present even though X-ray pictures show nothing abnormal. It is advisable that the ear be carefully examined and, where possible, that culture studies be made of the pus taken from the canal.

When a child runs a continuous high fever with a profuse discharge from the ear, pain in the ear, loss of appetite and restlessness, mastoiditis should be suspected. A physician should be called at once and the necessary tests should be made.

If operation is advised it should not be feared. The operation has been so perfected that it is done now with the minimum of risk. Mastoiditis is a serious disease only when neglected.

The mastoid is separated from the brain by a very thin layer of bone. Pus in the mastoid bone therefore is a serious menace, for it may travel to the brain. When the operation is performed, the brain is protected, because the pus is drained away from the infected mastoid.

Household Hints

Egg shells from uncooked eggs placed in a small white bag, then put in the washing machine with white clothes, will whiten the clothes beautifully.

Pass on the magazines when the family has read them. There are plenty of institutions that will welcome them and much good will be done with little effort and no expense on your part.

Toothpicks are tabu when it comes to their original use, but they certainly make splendid cake testers. When you think the cake is done pierce the center with a toothpick. If it comes out dry and clean the cake is done. If any of the batter sticks to the toothpick the cake requires further baking.

Clothing School Children

By CONSTANCE CAMERON

Personally, I delight in schools that require the children to wear uniforms. Possibly there is less scope for individuality when one wears what everyone else wears, but the individuality expressed in the school child's clothing is not usually his, anyway. It's his mother's.

This year, especially, it seems to me only sporting that you mothers who can afford elaborate school wardrobes for your children should temper them to fit in quietly with the clothing of the many children who will not be dressed as well as usual.

Don't feel that your child will suffer if you dress him simply, and much like his companions. It takes courage to dress differently from other people, and children don't gain that courage until they are no longer children. They are reveling now in the herd-feeling and will be far more comfortable if they are inconspicuous.

School clothing, to my mind, should all be of washable materials, with a good warm coat for protection outdoors. No matter how hard a teacher may try, there seems to linger a "schoolroom odor" about little frocks that have been worn all day.

So much for the ethics and sanitation of the school child's clothes. An important point yet to be discussed is the fit of those clothes.

Get your child's garments big enough so that he has free use of all his muscles. Nothing will make a child so irritable, or so unfit him to assimilate knowledge, as a dress or suit that binds and gives a sense of awkwardness.

WORLD AWAITS U. S. TO LEAD IN RECOVERY

By MERRYLE S. RUKEYSER
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—On account of its superior economic resources, the United States is the best equipped country to set an example for the rest of the world in the direction of a managed recovery, according to G. D. H. Cole, British liberal economist, in his new book entitled "A Guide Through World Chaos."

Cole concludes that credit expansion is necessary, and that such a policy should be supplemented by a deliberate program of governmental spending for public works. Declares the author:

Mr. Rukeyser

"What is needed from governments in times of persistent trade depression is a courageous policy of public investment, designed both to replace the money which private investors refuse to bring forward and, by the indirect demand which it would create, to persuade these investors to re-enter the field."

Dealing with the desirability of loans for self-liquidating projects, such as those authorized in this country in the Garner-Wagner bill, Cole points out:

"If, however, any such policy is to be successfully advocated, it must take a far more ambitious shape than a mere return to the policy which was already in operation on a small scale before the slump; for the great defect of this policy was that it confined government works almost exclusively to undertakings which could not be, and were not meant to be, financially reproductive in any direct sense. A renewed policy of public provision of employment must not confine itself to road-building and municipal public works. It must, in addition to a great development of housing, even beyond anything that has previously been done in this field, concentrate above all on efforts toward a real improvement in national productive capacity in forms likely to bring in a direct return—on the provision of money, on conditions, of course, for the reorganization and re-equipment of the old basic industries, and for the development of new industries and services calculated to meet the changing demands of the consuming public. It can include within its scope such measures as the electrification of the main line railways; but it cannot be complete and effective unless it also takes in hand directly the rationalization of existing industries and the development of new ones with the aid of national capital."

WEEKLY BANK CLEARINGS

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—With the holiday intervening, banking operations for the five days this week were naturally considerably smaller in volume than the heavy settlements for the first week of the month and were also very much less than those of a year ago. Total clearings this week for all leading cities in the United States, as reported to Dun's Review, were $3,353,292,000, a loss of 47.5 per cent, compared with last year. At New York City, clearings amounted to $2,167,207,000 and were 51.0 per cent less than a year ago, while for the cities outside of New York, the total was $1,186,085,000 or 39.2 per cent smaller.

The losses were again very heavy at the larger centers including among others New York, Boston, Chicago and Detroit. Little indication of improvement is to be noted in this week's return at any of the cities. At this time last year, banking operations were considerably above those of the earlier months. Quite a reduction, however, appeared in the later weeks of that year. The average daily figures so far for October continue above those of the three months preceding.

Figures for leading cities, as compiled by R. G. Dun & Co., showing decreases as compared with same period a year ago follow:

Five days October 11, 1932		Per cent
Boston	$ 162,143,000	Dec. 45.2
Philadelphia	215,000,000	Dec. 36.4
Baltimore	45,000,000	Dec. 30.8
Pittsburgh	67,205,000	Dec. 37.6
Buffalo	22,900,000	Dec. 37.1
Chicago	349,800,000	Dec. 48.8
Detroit	47,892,000	Dec. 43.2
Cleveland	51,893,000	Dec. 37.3
Cincinnati	34,719,000	Dec. 32.4
St. Louis	53,200,000	Dec. 30.0

EATON'S P. S. C. TRIP MYSTERY

HARRISBURG, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—Oliver K. Eaton, of Pittsburgh, chief counsel of the Senate committee investigating the Public Service Commission, today had returned from a trip to Washington, but declined to comment on his mission, saying only that it was an "enjoyable ride."

Eaton left for Washington early yesterday and returned last night. He admitted his trip was in connection with the investigation.

The inquiry begins Friday, seeking light on the corporate setup of the Philadelphia Company of Pittsburgh and its subsidiaries, including their relationship with the Byllesby Engineering and Management Corporation of Chicago. It will also seek source of money with which the late A. W. Thompson, former head of the Philadelphia Company, is said to have paid part of the hospital bills of the late William D. B. Ainey, former head of the commission, who resigned last August.

CARRIERS LEAD FRESH STOCK ADVANCE

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—After a somewhat irregular opening, prices firmed on the stock exchange today and toward the end of the first half hour of trading there were many gains of a point or so.

The rails took the leadership in early trading, advances of 1 or more points being recorded by Santa Fe, Union Pacific, Norfolk and Western, New York Central, Southern Pacific and Lackawanna. Other carriers were fractionally higher. United States Steel advanced 1 and the preferred 2. American Telephone was up about a point and gains of 1 or more were made by Public Service of New Jersey, Case, Macy, Westinghouse Electric and Eastman. The chemicals, headed by a gain of nearly 2 points by Allied Chemical, were up about a point for the leading shares in the group.

The weekly mercantile reviews were moderately encouraging, although it was apparent that they regarded "restraint on undue optimism" as a virtue at this time. Dun's, which sounded this precautionary note, remarked that "gratifying stability continues to be furnished by commodity prices, and the latest gains in railroad car loadings, electric power output, and steel production, and the textile and shoe activity have measured up to or exceeded anticipated seasonal proportions."

Bradstreet's pointed out that the political campaign is now entering its "last and most frenzied month" and that "disturbing influences are inescapable." "Business, however, seems to have more than an even chance of passing through this ordeal without material damage."

Railroad earnings in August, as shown in the final consolidated statement of 167 class 1 roads, showed net operating income was $28,368,387, still about half the August, 1931, total, which was also a lean period, but last August exceeded the total for July nearly 150 per cent.

Sterling cables opened up ¼ cent to $3.44⅝.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Loading of revenue freight during the week ended October 8 totaled 625,636 cars, an increase of 3,561 cars over the preceding week, but 138,182 cars under the corresponding week in 1931, the American Railway Association reports.

Standard of Ohio Raising Gasoline

CLEVELAND, Oct. 15.—The Standard Oil Company of Ohio will increase the price of gasoline one-half cent a gallon on all grades throughout its territory, effective tomorrow.

The increase, Standard officials said, follows wholesale gasoline advances resulting from efforts in Oklahoma and Texas to reduce crude oil production.

Walter Winchell ON BROADWAY

Was It Possible?

He sent her blooms to match her eyes,
A bright red scarf to mate her lips;
He told her lots of lovely lies,
And praised the glad lines of her hips—
One kiss he thought a glass of wine,
While two were drunken ecstasy—
He swore her laughter was divine
And marveled that such grace could be.

I met this paragon today,
The first time since she broke his heart—
Our greetings were so light, so gay,
But as we smiled and moved apart
I heard the voice of conscience cry:

"To think that that darned fool was I!"

—Bill Carpenter.

No Wonder!

Or: "Why Women Are Hard to Understand," by William J. Funk, who found the definition in Cassell's French-English Dictionary:

"Demoiselle: Young lady; unmarried lady; hot-water bottle; dragon-fly; Numidian crane; paving beetle."

Panecdote

Frank and Milt Britton, who with their batty bandsmen were in the great glorifier's last "Folde-rollies," recall two of the terpsichorines in the troupe, who got along with each other like a mustache and a cold in the nose.

They finally agreed not to talk to each other and silenced their opinions for two years. One day Ziegfeld reconciled them in his office. After kissing and clinching, one of them said:

"Well, Hazel, I wish you all you wish me."

"There, Mr. Ziegfeld!" screamed Hazel, "who is saying nasty things now?"

No Kiddin'?

The big difference, remarks L. Ashendorf, between a superstitious person and a columnist is that the superstitious one only knocks wood.

Tee, Hee

"They kill another columnist in the new picture at the Roxy," reports the Hurld-Trib's cinema oracle, Richard Watts, Jr. "Mr. Rian James, the author of 'Hat-Check Girl,' is, roughly speaking, a columnist himself, but he appears to have something of a grudge against his profession, and he is never so happy as when writing a novel wherein a sinister journalistic gossip is done away with by some amiable public servant. Apparently these literary massacres fill some need in his soul.

"It is to be feared, however, that whatever psychological satisfaction is thus supplied to the author is the only pleasure that is likely to come to anyone through the new Roxy screen work."

The author is better identified as a Brooklyn echo of F. P. A. and other paragraphers. Once he complained to a theatrical editor (who tried to reconcile the columnar craft with him on his complaint) that he couldn't understand their indifference to him.

"I don't know why they won't talk to me," he said naively, "I want to be friends with them."

The editor was Sime Silverman. The movie critic, it appears is psychic.

When Lindbergh returned from Paris, three reporters introduced themselves to this department at the pier with this:

"We are on the staff of the Brooklyn Eagle — and we're NOT Rian James!"

Which gives you an idea.

Dave Murrayisms

"So Joe is an individualist?" . . . "Yeah. When he goes to a movie he looks at Marlene Dietrich's face" . . . Some radio announcers have such kind voices you can't believe they'd let a soprano sing . . . First Golfer: What's your handicap? Second Golfer: My wife insists on going around with me . . . Love certainly is a wonderful thing . . . Look at all the crooners and songwriters who make a living out of it . . . A genius is a guy whose stuff is fit to be stolen by the following generation.

The Morning Mail

"Dear Walter," affectionately writes Fred Allen, who will soon make a bigger name for himself on the airwaves, "the scene is a Broadway haberdashery. A customer walks in, speaks briefly to a salesman and leaves without making a purchase. Furious, at the loss of a sale, the boss rushed over to the salesman and said: 'Sam, if you let another customer get away I'll give you a piece of my mind.'

"'That's all right with me,' said Sam. 'I'd rather have that than a piece of the business!'

"Izzy Elinson is wrong about school teachers being willing to work for apples that the scholars bring. If the kids had apples their fathers would be selling them on street corners!"

Form of Criticism

Added to Capsule Comments from Caustic Critics: The Journal des Debats, once the great oracle of France, published this single line as a review on Rossini's "Barber of Seville:"

"'Barber of Seville,' an opera written by a very, very, young man, opened last night!"

He Must Have!

What a lot of us would like to know is whether the present greeting, "You old potato!" by Alfred E. Smith to Gov. Roosevelt was really friendly, or did Mr. Smith have Thomas Overbury's words in mind?

Overbury once said:

"The man who did nothing to boast of but his illustrious ancestors is like a potato—the only good belonging to him is underground!"

We Have Heard Lots But the Most Is Yet to Come

—By ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER—

Let's look over the week and see what the embattled orators did to the opposition.

Hoover defends policies while hanging gamely to the ropes.

Huey Long denounces everybody twice and is on third lap when he blows a tire.

Ogden Mills roars from the housetops and wins if noise is power.

Cal Coolidge pours Vermont maple syrup on the troubled wheat cakes.

Franklin Roosevelt lashes administration on finance and relief and Jim Farley makes it a duet.

Curtis fears calamity of Democratic victory and Garner promises us beer by March. Even Sister Dolly will admit that's no calamity.

But wait until next week. That's when the boy on the burning deck will start dancing —when his feet get hot.

PICTURES REVIEWED: Critics See, Tell About New Screen Bills : AMUSEMENT NEWS

Sale Looking For Film Stories

By HARRISON CARROLL

(Copyright, 1932, King Features Synd., Inc.)

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 15.

Disappointed in most of his Hollywood vehicles, Charles (Chic) Sale, has hopped an airplane to New York to try to line up stories for future screen appearances.

The comedian, whose bucolic characters go well with the fans, but are suitable only to certain kinds of pictures, will make a bid for the screen rights to Clarence Buddington Kelland's "Scattergood" series. If the deal goes through, he expects to return here and confront the producers with ready-made material.

Chic Sale

In Chic's case, there is no question of scarcity of jobs. He works regularly in the talkies and can return to Broadway any day he wants to. But he is a conscientious performer and he likes the films. The thing is to get the stories.

Before returning to Hollywood, the comedian will make a brief stopover in Urbana, Ill., to see his parents.

BOULEVARD TOPICS

Lupe Velez says she will engage an English governess for her adopted daughter, Joan. The youngster arrived here Thursday amidst great excitement. Before the day was out, Lupe had her to the studio and then departed on a shopping expedition . . . Solving the mystery of where the autograph seekers get some of those photographs of the stars. They buy them from the film exchanges at 10 cents apiece . . . Greta Nissen and Weldon Heyburn not only have quit each other, but they have both left Fox . . . Some of us kick about the depreciation on our cars . . . First Chinese youth to get a test for the lead in "Broken Blossoms" will be Keye Luke, an artist employed in the R-K-O exploitation department. John Cromwell, so it's said will direct this picture . . . Biggest local stage hit in months is "The Cat and the Fiddle," starring Helen Gahagan. They're turning them away . . . Marie Dressler is that relieved. When she moved to her new house, her cat, an ordinary tabby, refused to accept the change. It returned to the old home and lurked there until Norma Shearer's mother, next-door neighbor, sent it back to Marie in a basket. After being shut up in the house for several days, the cat finally decided to stay.

CANTOR MAY TOUR

His picture finished, Eddie Cantor talks of gathering together another vaudeville show and making a tour of the key cities. The idea would fit into his series of radio broadcasts, as he could use any convenient microphone.

Such a plan worked out successfully last year, with the troupe doing two performances a day.

Hollywood may not see the comedian again until early summer. His contract with Samuel Goldwyn calls for only one picture a year.

Lloyd Is Hit In Warner

By EDWARD W. GOSS

If you happen to hear any unusual noises in the immediate neighborhood of Fifth avenue and Smithfield street within the next few days don't ask questions. The noises will be howls of laughter caused by the antics of Harold Lloyd on the Warner screen.

The picture, called "Movie Crazy," is a hilarious knockout. Lloyd plays a movie-struck small town lad. He intends to mail a picture of himself to a photoplay company. By accident he sends a likeness of another lad—a handsome young chap. The studio, properly impressed by the picture, summons Harold to Hollywood.

When Lloyd steps off the train in the land of movies he immediately proceeds to get himself all tangled up in one big mess. He is loved, kicked out of studios, punched in the nose by a jealous leading man, causes a riot in a night club and eventually is signed to one of those big, fat contracts.

The big laughs are wrung out of a night club sequence. Harold, by mistake, dons the coat of a magician. It is one of those coats with the invisible pockets housing rabbits, chickens, mice, flags and women's lingerie. A very formal dinner is being held at one of the tables. Suddenly from the pocket of Harold's dinner jacket appear the magician's pets. And if you don't think a live barnyard fowl is comicly incongerous on a table surrounded by the "better clawss" you should see "Movie Crazy." If you can't get a laugh out this bit of action you might as well quit paying to see comedies.

Appearing with Lloyd in this picture, which, incidently, is his first in two years, is the blonde Constance Cummings. She gives him excellent support.

BITS OF LIFE

All in a Day

By MARK HELLINGER

The Green-Eyed Monster

FROM THE very first day of her married life, Alice was a very jealous woman. With each passing year she grew more violently jealous and more suspicious. Thus, after 15 years of what is known as wedded bliss, she was in pretty fair form.

Each time Alice learned that Ed, her husband, had hired a new stenographer, she almost broke a leg hurrying to the office to get a peek at the girl. She might have any one of a number of other excuses, but you may be sure that that was the true purpose of the visit. If the young lady happened to have a face that would not actually cause a train wreck, she was promptly and unceremoniously bounced.

It was exactly the same at home. It is nothing short of a miracle that there were not quantities of food spoiled each week considering the homely maps of the servants who decorated Alice's kitchen.

You might think that Alice would be able to relax and be content when she had Ed safely isolated from all temptations. But not Alice. She harped continually on the possibility of an affair with another woman.

"Remember," she warned, "if I ever find out that you're running around with another woman, there's going to be something doing! Just let me catch you at it and I'll divorce you just as quick as that!"

During the early days of his married life, Ed, strange to relate, had absolutely no desire for the companionship of any woman other than his wife. All the man craved was a little peace and quiet. But with each quarrel he grew more and more convinced that peace and quiet would never be his while he lived with Alice.

With the constant sound of Alice's voice in his ears and her eternal nagging, the project that she was forever talking about—divorce—came to appear very attractive. The more she threatened, the more thoughtful Ed became. And the more he thought, the more certain he was that divorce was the one thing in the world that he wanted.

True, Ed had done nothing to justify Alice's suspicions, but surely it wasn't too late to start now. He was a fairly wealthy man. He felt certain that he could find some light-hearted lady to help him enjoy himself and his money. It proved to be the easiest job he had ever tackled.

By manufacturing various excuses, Ed managed to escape from his wife's sight at least two or three nights each week. A rather beefy blonde did much to change Ed's hitherto drab existence into a gay and hectic affair. With or without the blonde, Ed fell into the habit of dropping into speakeasies. It was always a simple matter to find someone to drink with him. He was learning the truth of the old saying—"Quaff and the world quaffs with you."

Now Ed looked forward with even keener anticipation to the day when he would be free of Alice. He was enjoying his new manner of living very much. It was only a matter of time, he told himself. Soon, now, Alice would find him out. And divorce him. Ed sighed happily.

He was dressing to go out one evening when Alice came into his room.

"Where are you going?" she asked suspiciously.

Ed gazed at her blandly.

"Why, darling," he murmured, "have you forgotten? This is the night of the lodge banquet."

"That's right," she said, "I did forget. Well, that's all right. But don't you forget this, Ed. If I ever catch you lying to me and cheating on me, I won't live in the same house with you another minute. There's one thing I won't stand. It'll mean divorce for you and me, Ed."

Ed turned back to the mirror to tie his tie and to hide his smile.

The next morning Ed was a little late to breakfast. Alice was there ahead of him, and it was plain to be seen that she was in a horrible rage.

"Where did you tell me you went last night?" she demanded.

"To the lodge banquet. Darling, you don't doubt me by any means?"

Alice began to sputter wildly. She shoved an envelope across the table to her husband.

"Look at this!" she shrieked. "An anonymous letter! Telling me that my husband is running around with a blonde woman. Doubt you! And you stand there and lie to me and tell me that you were at a stag banquet last night!"

"Now, now," Ed soothed. "Wait a minute—"

"You were with her! You know you were!" Alice screamed. "And I have to find it out through a sneaking letter like this! I suppose everybody in town knows about it but me!"

She paused and drew a long breath.

"Well," she resumed, "you know what I've always told you. You can get out of this house now! The quicker the better! I warned you what would happen if I found out you were running around with another woman. Get out now! I'll have your clothes sent to you."

Ed shook his head sadly and turned away.

"You're making an awful mistake," he murmured. "I've told you the truth about where I was."

And when Alice wasn't looking, he smiled again . . .

On his way to work that morning, Ed was a very happy man. He was free now to go his own way, enjoy himself any way he cared to.

There had been a time when he felt himself growing impatient. He had begun to be afraid that Alice wouldn't learn about him and the blonde mamma. It was then that the idea had occurred to him. The idea of sending Alice an anonymous letter.

It had worked—and how! Alice had gone hook, line and sinker. Ed grinned. At that moment, he was very well satisfied with himself.

Sad to relate, however, he wasn't a free man for very long. He wasn't rid of Alice by any matter of means. She came to his office an hour later in the most penitent of moods. And as Ed looked at her with wide open eyes, she actually begged for forgiveness.

"To think," she sobbed, "that I could have said the terrible things I told you this morning. To think that I could have doubted you at any time! You're the sweetest, dearest man that ever lived. Forgive me. Please forgive me."

On and on she went. She was full of promises for the future if Ed would only forgive her. She would never, she declared, believe an anonymous letter again as long as she lived. She realized now that someone was jealous of them and their happiness, and was trying by that means to destroy everything.

Ed remained wide-eyed until she explained. Then he understood. Shortly after he had left that morning, a messenger had called to deliver his topcoat. He had left it at the lodge rooms the evening before.

For that morning, for the first time in weeks, Ed had told Alice the truth regarding his whereabouts . . .

Gossip From Movies

Lionel Barrymore has his beard marcelled for court scenes in "Rasputin," in which he plays the title role for Metro-Goldyn-Mayer.

That Wallace Beery's first long pants suit was made over from the uniform of his father, who was a policeman, and that it was worn by the two other brothers before Wally inherited it.

Jimmy "Schnozzle" Durante used to sell newspaper all day in New York City for a salary of 18 cents.

John Ford, who is to direct Wally Beery in "Flesh," has smoked the same pipe during every picture he has directed since "The Iron Horse."

That Clark Gable once played in a stock company that was operated on a co-operative basis, and got for his share in one week of 14 performances, the sum of $1.30.

That Mitchell Lewis, who is running for the Legislature at the next election, will be Hollywood's first representative in government, if elected.

WILL ROGERS SAYS

ANTOFAGASTA, Oct. 15.

To the Editor, Sun-Telegraph:

You remember such a fuss one time over a region between Peru and Chili called Tacna Arica?

Will Rogers

Well, I was there today. It takes an airplane to find it. It would be just like us going to war with somebody over Death Valley, Cal.

They said I was the only American ever there that wasn't sent by the U. S. Government as a commission to settle it. This is the heart of the great nitrate region of Chili. We are right at this moment, as I am writing this, flying over some of the mines. They are not mines. They are right out on a flat prairie desert and they just scrape it, almost, off the top of the ground.

It's just like plowing up potatoes. I can get some mighty cheap and both political parties was needing it mighty bad when I left. Was I talking about rain the other day? Well, we have had two thousand miles of solid desert where it never rains. That's a fact, it was never known to rain.

Yours, WILL.

'Life Begins' Film in Stanley

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

"Life Begins" is the photoplay in the Stanley that is worthy of the attention of any adult. Because it is not a picture to describe accurately without misleading readers into the belief they might find it objectionable, since all of the action is laid in the maternity ward of a hospital, it were better to leave out details. The last sentence even has an obstetrical threat, but there is not the slightest indelicacy in this honest, intensely dramatic, poignant exposition of an exalted love.

HAS DEPTH OF FEELING

This picture of nurses and physicians and husbands and wives and babies is just a simple story, but it is visualized with such nicety of realism and depth of feeling that it emerges as a heart-touching revelation of the miracle of motherhood. Of course, there are a specific husband and wife who are made the focal point of the story, and there is no human heart that cannot surge out to them in pulsations of affinity and sympathy.

It is sheer drama, but is not drab. There is romance in it, and so-called "comedy relief," but even that is so finely adjusted, so appropriate to the scene, that it is never obtrusive, is never anything but a note in the mood of the theme as a whole. Its tender and stern touches fall upon youth and age alike as the angel of life hovers over young women and others to whom its gifts are neither new nor strange.

TRIBUTE TO NURSES

It is a grand tribute to the profession of nursing and medicine, and a golden crown for parenthood.

Loretta Young, as a young patient in a hospital ward, is an extremely pathetic figure, whose sad little attempt to be brave eventually puts her in the ranks of the heroines of all time. Eric Linden, as her youthful husband, provides an example of devotedness that is sincere and credible. Aline McMahon, former McKeesport girl, can be called a practical patron saint of nurses for her work in this picture. Glenda Farrell, hard-boiled type, is softened and made human by the arrival of twins.

Showboat to Reopen Next Friday

The Showboat, Allegheny River at Sixth street and Duquesne way, for long a floating cabaret, which has been in disuse for many months, will reopen at 10 o'clock next Friday night, again under the management of Joe Hiller. The policy will include three floor shows nightly with Romo Vincent officiating as master of ceremonies. Burns and Swanson, dancers, and an ensemble that Mr. Hiller labels "Ladies From Hades" will be part of the initial bill. The "Ladies" are 10 Pittsburgh girls.

Miljan Addition to "Flesh" Cast

John Miljan is an addition to the cast of "Flesh," the new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture in which Wallace Beery has the role of a German wrestling champion. Karen Morley has the feminine lead in "Flesh" and Ricardo Cortez one of the other featured parts.

New Stars in Night Club Romance

By GEORGE SEIBEL

Stamping out new stars just as they coin silver dimes does not seem so difficult after you view the new picture at the Penn, called "Night After Night," introducing George Raft and Constance Cummings—two stellar luminaries that have twinkled very faintly up to now. On the same principle that makes boys feel anybody can be president, it may now be taken for granted that anybody can be a Greta Garbo or a Clark Gable. George Raft and Constance Cummings are as good as any dozen who might be picked at random in the starry heavens of Hollywood. Unless the unaccountable public insists on picking its own stars, here are two that will shine from Bangor to Alameda.

Mr. Seibel

"Night After Night" is made from a story by Louis Bromfield, who is one of the authors of the intelligentsia, but has provided merely another gangster romance of hectic passion and the regeneration of a prize-fighter. The pug is George Raft, proprietor of a night club, who is impressed profoundly by a solitary lady who comes nightly to his establishment.

He is impressed so profoundly that he turns away from all the other "dames" he has known and proceeds to take lessons in "cutuah" from Alison Skipworth, besides planning to sell his night-club. When one of the discarded dames tries to shoot him, he shows so much courage that Constance kisses him. But she is engaged to the rich and handsome Louis Calhern, merely for his money, and the rough diamond who thought her kiss meant she loved him tells her what he thinks of her in very uncultured language. Whereupon she proves she is a real lady by going to his speakeasy and smashing pictures and bric-a-brac.

This also proves that she loves him and they are living happily ever after, for from the night-club to which Mae West lends the brightest glamor.

It did not require Louis Bromfield to write this story, while George Raft and Constance Cummings do as well as any of the well-known idols of the screen with numerous divorces.

But you can't make a Zasu Pitts and a Thelma Todd over night—as that pair prove by their mad adventures in a hospital, where they narrowly escape all sorts of operations while the audience is writhing with laughter.

MENTOR ROLL TO SHOW MANY CHANGES

THE MAJOR COLLEGIATE football map bids fair to be changed greatly from a coaching angle before the season of 1933 arrives. Amos Alonzo Stagg is definitely done at Chicago. Maj. Ralph Sasse is serving his last season at West Point. H. W. Hargiss already has been ousted at Kansas. Rumors again have Maj. Frank Cavanaugh leaving Fordham. Several other changes are taking shape.

A. A. Stagg

The passing of Stagg is the most notable shift. Only in the death of Walter Camp and Knute Rockne did football lose a figure so prominent. A playing choice as an end on Camp's original all-America team in 1889, and for 40 years coach at Chicago, Stagg has been so closely and outstandingly identified with the life of the gridiron sport that it won't seem like the same game without him. His Chicago teams have slumped in recent years to the extent of winning only two out of 18 Western Conference games in the last four seasons, but his all-time record compares with the best, and for personal traits football never has known a finer character.

ANY ORDINARY FOOTBALL team might have been crushed for weeks to follow by such a beating as Duquesne suffered at Pitt's hands last Saturday. The Dukes showed that they are made of the real stuff and demonstrated the rare spirit of their school by their quick and stout-hearted rally in coming back to defeat Oglethorpe decisively last night, 21 to 6.

The result bore out the opinion of many that the big score a week ago was due not to any Duquesne weakness, but to Pitt's extraordinary strength. The refusal of the Bluffites to let that disappointment shake their spirit augurs well for their chances in the hard games remaining on their schedule.

IN HIS ARTICLE telling how his Chicago Bears, defeating Ernie Nevers' Chicago Cardinals five times during the last two years, halted Pop Warner's famed assault on the tackles by using the Southern California defense, Red Grange did not reveal where he learned the Howard Jones system.

But football men on the coast say it's an easy guess. They see the answer in the fact that Jesse Hibbs, former star tackle at Southern California, was a member of Grange's pro eleven.

POSSIBLY GRANGE DOESN'T know all there is to be known about the system. Jones left that to be inferred when he was asked, "Is Grange's explanation of your defense against Stanford an adequate and complete one?" His only reply was "Not entirely," and he couldn't be induced to elaborate on the statement. It is said that coaches whose teams play Stanford, particularly Eastern mentors, though Pitt men are known exceptions, have approached the Trojan board of strategy from time to time and asked for Jones' defense against the Warner attack. Naturally, their requests have been refused. Six weeks from today we'll see what Dr. Sutherland, one of Warner's own pupils and the greatest coach that ever came out of Pop's school, can do with the problem.

WITH THE OFFICIAL family of the Brooklyn baseball club settled down again by the election of Stephen W. McKeever, 77, and the oldest club president in the majors, to succeed Frank B. York at the head of the organization, Manager Max Carey will now be able to go through with a deal or two he has had in mind for some time.

S. W. McKeever

Carey's first dicker of the off season may be made with the Cardinals. That Del Bissonette will be able to play again is reported doubtful. That leaves the Dodgers in need of a first baseman. The Cards have Jim Bottomley, Rip Collins and Pat Crawford, not to mention Ernest Orsatti, an outfielder who also can play the initial bag. Carey thinks any one of them would help his team.

THE BROOKLYN CLUB has had fewer presidents than any other present member of the National League. McKeever is only the fifth chief executive since the club was admitted to the circuit in 1890.

The first was Charles H. Byrne, called the little Napoleon of baseball, and one of the greatest figures among the magnates of his time. He served from 1890 until his death on January 4, 1898. Charles H. Ebbets succeeded him, to hold office for 27 years until he died on April 18, 1925. Wilbert Robinson was both president and manager up to the end of the 1929 season, and York was at the head of the club the last three years.

SOMETIMES WHEN A player who has looked like a star on a weak team is obtained by a strong club and then fails to live up to his reputation, the answer is that he never was as good as he had appeared to be. He had stood up only because he was in feeble company. He had shone merely by reason of the fact that he was on a tail-ender where there was no responsibility or tension, and he could go about his work in care-free fashion, serene in the knowledge that it would not matter a great deal whether any particular day brought victory or defeat. He had had everything to gain and nothing to lose in each game, and was unable to show the same form under pressure when shifted to a pennant contender having something at stake daily.

BUT ACCORDING TO Joe McCarthy, that is not true in the case of Danny MacFayden. Looking like one of the best right-handers in the American League while with the Red Sox, MacFayden was able to pitch only seven victories after being transferred to the Yankees. The manager says it was due simply to trying too hard.

"When MacFayden gets so he does not try so hard, and is simply loose and natural, as he was while pitching for the Red Sox, then he will win a lot of games for us," McCarthy predicts. "He has plenty of stuff, and the boys who laughed at his lack of success with us will have to eat their words."

IT WAS AN old story that came out of Brooklyn the other night to the effect that Jack Redman, South Bend Negro fighter, though owning a good right-hand punch, had not been able to land it on Maxie Rosenbloom. That's an experience they all have when facing Rosenbloom. Boxing men agree that it's about as easy to land a solid punch on Maxie's chin as it is to hang on to a greased pig.

Jake Schaefer

While only a powder-puff puncher himself, Rosenbloom never worries about the other fellow's punching ability. "What do I care how hard they can hit, when they can't hit me?" he asks. Maxie, by the way, after a string of non-title bouts, is scheduled to defend his light-heavyweight championship against Mickey Walker in New York next month.

A TOURNAMENT FOR the world professional 18.2 balkline billiard championship is in prospect for the first time since 1929. Tired of waiting for action by the National Billiard Association, which has neglected balkline for three years and spent a small fortune trying to popularize three cushions, the leading players are said to have resolved to hold a title tournament in New York before the winter is over, on their own hook. Jake Schaefer, Willie Hoppe and Welker Cochran are named as certain contestants, with Eric Hagenlacher and Kinrey Matsuyama likely to be added. It appears that the depression has accomplished the revival of the game, something that could not be done in more prosperous times. The boys need money and they can't get it on exhibition tours.

than 1,000 townspeople from Little Washington, home of the Presidents, including the three high school teams of Washington and vicinity. Also a gob of youngsters who will be admitted for 10 cents. The age limit for this group has been raised for the day from 12 to 16 years.

UNKNOWN QUANTITIES

The teams will enter the game more or less unknown quantities. W. & J. has a new coach, Hank Day, the miracle mentor of Washington High School teams for many years, who has succeeded Bill Amos on the job. He is said to have developed a quite mystifying attack which should be hard to stop, as well as a sturdy defense, which held the University of Detroit to a one-touchdown victory at Detroit a week ago. Tech has beaten Geneva by one touchdown to none and Western Reserve, 19-0, to date.

Each of the elevens will take the field minus a star player from its regular lineup. The Tartans will be without the services of Co-Capt. Hooks Sample at left guard, Heinzer having been moved over from the other guard post to fill the gap, with Burzio taking his place. W. & J.'s absentee is Red Rittersbaugh, star right end.

M'CURDY AT QUARTER

Harry McCurdy, who was hailed as another Howard Harpster when he was called upon to fill the latter's shoes at quarterback for the Plaid, returns to the role of starting field general for the home crew, after the coaches have alternated Dueger and Bevevino in that position. His presence gives the Plaid one more good punter, Ray Tesser, the end, and Joe Mihm, the fullback, both being above the average in this department. Co-Capt. George Kavel and Bill Spisak, the sensational sophomore, will be the Tech halfbacks at the opening whistle.

Shaffer will start at quarter, Zagray and Rometo at the halves and King at fullback for the invaders.

The Wash-Jeff hosts will not arrive here until just before game time, and will go direct to the Stadium, where a preliminary battle between the Pitt and Tech freshmen will be under way beginning at noon.

TITANS PLAY GROVERS

Westminster plays at Grove City today in a homecoming game; the Slippery Rock Teachers oppose Thiel at Greenville; the Edinboro Teachers are at California; Waynesburg, fresh from its second straight victory over Penn State, engages Bethany at Bethany, W. Va.; the two old West Virginia rivals—the University and Wesleyan—vie at Morgantown; Allegheny plays at Springfield (Mass.) College, Penn State tackles Harvard at Cambridge, and Kiski is at Annapolis for a tussle with the Navy Plebes.

EXPLANATION OF RIPLEY'S CARTOON OF YESTERDAY: THE LARGEST LAND OWNER OF NORTH AMERICA—This distinction belongs to Sir Robert G. Reid (1840-1908), a Scotchman, whose railroad contract with the government of Newfoundland is the most renowned event in the history of that country. This contract (1893) provided for the construction in three years of a transinsular railway from St. John to Port au Basque, to be paid for by a grant of land amounting to 5,000 acres for each mile constructed, in addition to other valuable considerations. In 1898, this contract was amended in a manner as to place Sir Robert in possession of an aggregate of 5,000,000 acres of land, as well as most of the mines, ores, minerals, railroads, steamships, docks, telegraph lines and timber of the country. Sir Robert, who thus became the greatest financial power, often was referred to as the "Czar of Newfoundland."

SOLDIER HOSTS SEEK REVENGE ON PANTHER

appearance in the vicinity of New York, the Panthers were beaten by Syracuse and the educated toe of big John McBridge, Orange fullback, who booted a placement goal to shoot Pitt down the shute of a 3-0 setback. It will cause no little furore in the ranks of the Panthers, and indeed, of the entire East, should the Army win today, for it does not figure to and is considered less than 8 to 5 chance of turning back the fast and accomplished Panther eleven.

COLORFUL TURNOUT

A capacity crowd of 25,000, the best they can do in the gem-like Michie Stadium, will be on hand for today's battle. It will be a distinguished turnout with celebrities from the Army and Navy, the stage and the screen and from the top of the social and political world present. Some 700 fans arrived by special train from Pittsburgh this morning.

It is the fond hope of the Army to avenge last year's defeat in Pittsburgh and to this end, Maj. Ralph Sasse's Cadets will give all they have. The Soldiers are tough to beat here in their own back yard, and they fight like demons under the frowning protection of Old Storm King mountain, under who's craggy peak nestles little Michie Stadium.

But the chance of a Cadet victory appears dim. In the first place, and most important, the Soldiers are only ordinarily strong at the tackles, a bad spot to have any weakness against a team using the Warner system and working it as well as do the Panthers.

ARMY BACKS ORDINARY

The Army backfield men have little to recommend them; there isn't a triple, or even a double threat man in the set. They have a fine kicker in Travis Brown, but Brown isn't much of a ball lugger and only a fair passer. Ken Fields, at halfback, looks like the best of the lot but he's no Stecker, no Cagle, no Wilson or no Herb. Herb, the best of the backfield men left from last year's team, is lying in the Point Hospital with a broken leg.

Maj. Sasse, who completes his four-year trick here at the academy this year, is set on his starting lineup. He'll have his two aces, Kopscak and King, at the ends. Armstrong and Lincoln, the men who are in for a licking today, will be at the tackles. At the guards, Capt. Milt Summerfelt will be paired off with Jablonsky. Evans will be over the pigskin at center.

EAGER TO BEAT PITT

The Major experimented all week with his backfield, and came out of a huddle with himself after yesterday's practice determined on a starting quartet of McWilliams, Field, Brown and Kilday. It isn't as powerful an array as the Carver, Stecker, Brown and Herb set, not as fast or as clever, but it will play football above its collective heads today, for the Soldiers would like nothing better than to present their beloved Maj. Sasse, as popular a coach as ever flashed a salute at the Point, with a win over Pitt as a parting gift.

Dr. Sutherland, who has brought his Panthers along faster than he ever brought an eleven before, will use his regular lineup with Shotwell filling in a center in the place of the injured Joe Tormey. The suspicion lurks in the back of your correspondent's mind that the good doctor isn't much worried over the loss of Tormey, for Shotwell, so far, has proven himself one of those rarities, a sophomore who has the football brains of a senior.

Muggsy Skiff and Ted Dailey will start at the ends. The two big fellows, Paul Cuba and Bob Hoel, are set at the tackles. Hartwig and Onder will be the guards.

REIDER TO START

In the backfield for the first time since the Ohio Northern game, Capt. Paul (Bulldog) Reider will gallop from right halfback. Pitt's dynamic mite the last who sparked the Panther machine as it rolled over the Cadets last year. With him will be the incomparable Warren Heller, who appears to be ranking left halfback of the East. Weinstock will batter away at the Cadet line at fullback and Meadville Bobby Hogan will run the team from quarter. He will also do the punting.

Today for the first time this fall, the Panthers will open up. The four straight football plays that were used in crushing Ohio Northern, West Virginia and Duquesne will be set aside and the double wing back formations employed, along with a tricky set of forward passes and one or two other plays canny Dr. Sutherland has tucked up his sleeve.

BIREK BOXES DRAW

SAN RAFAEL, Cal., Oct. 15. — Chic Raines, of Dallas, Tex., won a decision over Roy Carnegie, of Berkeley, in the eight-round main bout here last night. Johnny Birek, of Pittsburgh, fought a fast four-round draw with Eddie Cubi, of San Francisco, in the opening bout.

MOUNTAINEERS FACE BOBCATS

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Oct. 15.—The West Virginia Mountaineers and the Wesleyan Bobcats, long-time rivals, clash here this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

West Virginia is a slight favorite to win because of her overwhelming record of past victories, but Coach Earle Neale and all Mountaineer followers are expecting the Methodist aggregation to give the Blue and Gold one of the hardest battles of recent years.

The Mountaineers will outweigh the invaders man for man, but the reported speed and aggressiveness of the Bobcat stalwarts is expected to more than make up this difference. The Wesleyan line in particular is touted as a great combination by West Virginia scouts, who have seen the Buckhannon collegians in action. The probable lineup:

Wesleyan.		W. Virginia.
Kline	L.E.	Harr
Giantonio	L.T.	McDonald
Blondin	L.G.	Zirbs
Edmundson	C.	Wright
Powell	R.G.	Swisher

Grid Broadcasting Favored in Alabama

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Oct. 15. — (AP.) — The Alabama Legislature adopted unanimously yesterday a resolution requesting that the Southern Conference, at its next regular meeting after the close of the present football season, remove its ban on broadcasting of football games.

A bill to legalize broadcasting of athletic contests played in this state by teams representing state schools was killed by a Senate committee Wednesday after the House had passed it.

ARMY BATTLE ON ETHER

The Pitt-Army football game at West Point today will be broadcast by WCAE and WWSW.

Both stations will relay telegraphic descriptions of the contest to their listeners.

The game will get under way at approximately 2 o'clock.

KDKA and its international short wave station, W8XK, will be linked on the NBC-WJZ network for the Notre Dame-Drake game, getting under way at 2:45 o'clock, with Bill Munday at the microphone.

Soccer Card Offers Four Good Games

Soccer roads will lead to Mt. Lebanon this afternoon, where Lawrenceville and Mt. Lebanon, undefeated teams, clash in the feature game of the Pittsburgh Central League.

Both clubs have a powerful scoring front line, and a good defense, and there is reason to feel that the fans will witness one of the best games of the season.

At the Westinghouse High School Stadium, Clan Douglas and McKeesport will meet.

At Swissvale, the Union Switch and Signal team, defending champion, will play Ambridge. The Bridge Workers are supposed to have a good club, and the champions are having a tough time getting started.

The fourth game in the league will find the Westinghouse team meeting German Sport Club at Leslie Park.

JOCKEYS INJURED

BALTIMORE, Oct. 15. — (AP.)—Paul Yingling and S. Austin, steeplechase jockeys, are in the South Baltimore General Hospital with concussion of the brain. They were brought to the hospital unconscious from the Laurel race track after being thrown by their horses during the second race yesterday. Eddie Ball, also thrown, was treated at the track.

Local Lad, Army Center, May Oppose Pitt Today

Former Schenley Player on Squad Of Cadets

Alvin L. Mente, Jr., Oakland boy and former Schenley High School and Carnegie Tech gridder, is one of the Army squad which faces the Pitt Panthers at West Point this afternoon. Not yet 21, Mente, a sophomore at the Military Academy, is the third-string center of the varsity. As the two first-string passers are due to graduate this year, he may be the regular center next fall. He figures to break into today's game.

Alvin is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Mente, Sr., of 219 Boquet street. He attended Cathedral parochial grade school before entering Schenley High and then spent some time at Carnegie. He is a nephew of former Congressman John M. Morin. He excels in the classrooms and is one of the most popular members of the sophomore class.

Hockey Pilot Gets Attractive Berth

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—Joe Simpson, last year manager of the New Haven Eagles of the Canadian-American Hockey League, yesterday was named manager of the New York Americans of the National Hockey circuit to succeed Eddie Gerard.

Simpson will be succeeded at New Haven by Eddie Powers, former manager of the Boston Cubs of the same minor circuit.

SHADYSIDE TIES

Shadyside Academy played a scoreless tie game with Mt. St. Mary High yesterday at the Academy grounds. The Mount lads threatened in the last period, rushing the ball to the Academy 10-yard line, where they were held. Previously in the second period Shadyside had the ball on the 10-yard mark, but failed in the attempt to score.

GENEVA BEATS ST. VINCENT

BEAVER FALLS, Pa., Oct. 15.—Geneva College grid players today sang the praises of the gritty eleven from St. Vincent's College. Two two teams clashed here last night and while the Covenanters won, they had to extend themselves all the way. The score was 14-7.

In the third quarter Harry Johnson, flashy halfback of the invading team, broke away for a 70-yard run and a touchdown. Furins' placement goal tied the score, the Genevans having scored in the first quarter on a rather lucky play.

The Harpster offense stepped out in the fourth quarter to clinch the game. Geneva worked the ball gradually from the middle of the field. Troiano, who turned in the first score, also made the second Geneva touchdown. The lineup:

Depression Helps Pro Grid Leagues

CHICAGO, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—Jack Chevigny, former Notre Dame backfield star, now coaching the Chicago Cardinals, says hard times have helped professional football by increasing the number of ex-collegians eager to get into the pro ranks, thus heightening competition for jobs.

FOUR AA GAMES FEATURE SCHOOL GRID CARD TODAY

TUBERS OPPOSE 'KENSINGTON ELEVEN

By JULIUS LEVIN

The newly-formed Class AA High School Conference will bask in the football spotlight today when four attractive contests will be offered the followers of this circuit.

The feature attraction is listed for the New Kensington High Field where New Kensington and McKeesport, both undefeated elevens, risk their hopes for the championship.

Coach Carl Glock, of New Kensington, and Coach Bill Sullivan, of McKeesport, have been priming their grid machines for this game and both teams will take the field in the best of physical condition.

CHARLEROI AT CLAIRTON

In the other Double A engagements, Charleroi plays at Clairton, Greensburg goes to Norwin and Monessen is the attraction at Jeannette. Greensburg and Jeannette are making their first starts in the Conference.

Two members of the City League go out of town for important battles. Schenley, winner of the Section I title in 1931, is the attraction at Johnstown, while Taylor Allderdice is the opponent of Wilkinsburg at Graham Field. Schenley will strive to emulate Peabody, also a member of the Section I group, which defeated Johnstown, 7-6.

CALIFORNIA AT AMBRIDGE

The Beaver Valley schedule is featured by the Ambridge-California skirmish at Ambridge. Ambridge is in the thick of the fight for the class A championship and a victory for Moe Rubenstein's Bridgers over Carl Aschman's eleven will enhance their chances considerably.

Upsets enlivened the play of the city high schools yesterday, three unlooked for reverses developing in Section II. Perry High caused a big rumpus by taking the measure of the Allegheny High eleven. The score was 14-6. Allegheny had the jump on the rival school after landing a touchdown largely through the efforts of Mike Gamelier, but when Harris entered the game for Perry everything was changed. Harris tore off one long run for a touchdown. Manning making the other.

CITY CHAMPS LOSE

Langley High won out on a fine show as it downed the city champions, South Hills High, 12-0. Saveikis had a great day as he bounded over the goal for a couple of touchdowns in the first and second quarters. The spectators put on a big scene as a result of the Langley success.

Oliver High looked like a real team as it threw back the strong Carrick High eleven, the score being 13-6. The Oliver victory also was in the nature of a surprise. Payne recovered a blocked kick for a touchdown. Faust intercepted a forward pass on Carrick's 23-yard line and ran for a touchdown in the last quarter.

In Section I, Peabody High had an easy time scoring a victory over the light Fifth Avenue High team. The score was 31-0.

NEW CASTLE WINNER

New Castle High scored its second straight victory in the Class A Conference by swamping Washington in a night game at New Castle, 21-0. Homestead unset Mt. Lebanon, 13-6; Glassport defeated Trafford, 13-2; McKees Rocks defeated Coraopolis 6-0; Duquesne and Hurst tied, 6-6; Swissvale swamped Avalon 19-0; Edgewood crushed Verona, 33-6; Carnegie defeated Stowe, 6-0; Cecil surprised with a 7-6 victory over Rankin; Bellevue defeated Sewickley 6-0; Burgettstown nosed out Elizabeth, 7-6; Etna was an easy winner over Millvale, 19-0; Munhall and Central Catholic High battled to a 6-6 draw, and Har-Brack defeated Kittanning, 25-7, in other important games.

PAPALES READY FOR BIG GAME

Sandlot fans will see a classy ball carrier in Pete Susanno, Uniontown boy who will be in the East Liberty Papales' backfield opposing West View at West View Park tomorrow afternoon.

Susanno will take the place of Hymie Goldberg, and Boots Klinzing will start at fullback in place of Joe Morbito. Morbito and Goldberg were injured in the Bellaire game last Sunday.

At Greenlee Field the fans will see Bud Devinney in the spangles of the Rooney Big Green gridders, who tackle the Dan Burns club. Bucky Wagner twisted an ankle in the Erie game, and will be missing.

Stanley Berkman, Burns' quarterback, feels that the Black and White gridders from the Allegheny river will take the measure of Art Rooney's entry. The team has been scoring heavily, and a well balanced line and a fast backfield may upset the Rooneys' plan to go through another season undefeated.

The Scott Morgan-Tarentum game will be played at Greenlee Field Tuesday evening.

Steffen Possible Successor to Stagg

CHICAGO, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—Amos Alonzo Stagg's successor as football coach at the University of Chicago is unknown.

Prof. Thomas Nelson Metcalf, the new athletic director, will not attempt to coach, although Stagg combined both positions during his 41-year career. Appointment of the new football coach will hinge on a recommendation of Metcalf, university authorities said.

Shepherd College Player In All-America List

By CHRISTY WALSH

Member All-America Board of Football. (Registered U. S. Patent Office.)

The following 10 players have been given All-America rating by reason of excellent and outstanding performance in their respective games played last week.

NISBET—University of Washington. Outstanding star in game played against Oregon last Saturday. Royal Brougham, of Seattle Post-Intelligencer, says Nisbet's work against Oregon stamps him as one of the greatest coast ends in recent years.

GOLDSMITH—Georgia Tech. He wore down two big Kentucky lift tackles with his hard blocking. He covered perfectly, cutting down runbacks to a minimum. His tackling was ideal. He carried the ball for gains on reverse plays and stuck in there 60 minutes at top speed against a heavier team that was favored to win.

McANLY—Florida. Mark this one down on your special list! One hundred and five yards for a touchdown! And don't forget a football field is only 100 yards from end to end, but this young man starts behind his own goal posts and winds up behind Swanee's goal—just one long, frenzied dash. Isn't that going places, for a boy right off the freshman squad?

ZIMMERMAN—Tulane. He punts spirals, corkscrews and lazy floaters, as he wishes. He tosses laterals like nothing at all. He forward-passes like a sharpshootin' fool. He's the kick-off man. He boots goals after touchdowns—which he generally makes himself. He runs the ends like a frightened cotton-tail and hits the line like Log Gehrig against the Cubs. That's Mr. Zimmerman—according to Jimmy Burns, of the Atlanta Georgian.

COLLINS—Creighton University. This halfback, who plays quarterback on the defense, was the outstanding figure in Creighton's underdog team last Saturday. Collins' work, according to Sec Taylor, of the Des Moines Register, was largely responsible for holding the strong Marquette team to a scoreless tie. Collins ran back punts for many yards and averaged 40 yards per kick on 19 punts.

MADDEX—Shepherd College. Never heard of it, you say? Well, just watch Bob Ripley's cartoons, for he'll soon be telling how a lad named Hunter Maddex down in West Virginia scored all of his team's points, including an 88-yard sprint for the final touchdown, and personally rolled up the grand and glorious total of 231 yards in a single game—Believe It or Not.

PETOSKEY—Michigan. This powerful 175-pound left end was consistently spectacular in smashing Northwestern interference and was particularly effective in breaking up Rentner's runs, the Wildcats' greatest hope and threat.

MOSS—Purdue. In the grueling battle with Minnesota, the educated toe of this veteran Boilermaker pulled Nobel Kizer's team out of several bad holes. Eddie Ash, of the Indianapolis Times, says Moss not only rates All-America, but he considers him the most important factor in Purdue's drive for another undefeated season.

ZIMMER—Chicago. Nothing to equal the runbacks of this phantom has been seen in the East this football season. And he's under every play—no matter what team has the ball. He buzz-sawed Yale to pieces. He passed the ball 45 yards for the score that tied, and, like his amazing little teammate, Sahlin, he was in there 60 grueling minutes.

MONTGOMERY—Columbia. He scored two touchdowns and thereby hangs a tale—the tail of the Princeton Tiger. But that wasn't the half of it—he smashed the line, he zoomed around the ends, he whipped passes in all directions and he inspired Columbia to beat Princeton, 20 to 7.

Each player mentioned in these ratings, published every Saturday, will receive a card of merit, issued by the All-America Board of Football.

All-America ratings are based on performance in a single game only and the names of new players will appear each week. Players from small colleges have the same chance as those from the larger universities because the weekly ratings are based on information furnished by experienced football writers and observers in all sections of the United States.

YAROSZ BEATS LICHTENSTEIN AT ARENA

Ted Yarosz, of Monaca, still is undefeated after 58 professional fights, with only a draw between the fifty-sixth and the fifty-eighth to mar a perfect record.

Last night, at the Arena, on the North Side, the Beaver Valley welterweight kept moving along by taking Meyer Lichtenstein, cool, rangy former Baltimorean, now of Rochester, N. Y., in his stride.

It was a good, interesting fight, with Ted winning every round, but having to step his fastest to keep the edge. Lichtenstein turned out to be a stalking counter puncher, who was dangerous at all times, and Ted beat him by keeping busy. He was ever circling about and flailing away with both fists, punching, slapping, cuffing, anything to keep Lichtenstein from taking the offensive.

BOTH IN DANGER

There were several highlights. One came in the fifth round when Ted landed his most damaging punch, a right to the jaw that dazed Lichtenstein and forced him to back to the ropes and cover. Yarosz pursued him and blazed away with both barrels, but Meyer recuperated rapidly and fought his way out of the storm.

Two rounds later, Lichtenstein returned the compliment, crashing a right to the jaw and hurting Ted and forcing him to hold on in a clinch that followed.

They wound up in a flurry of gloves, with Yarosz fighting himself out and floundering a bit at the final bell, after he had put on the rally to overcome a resounding right to the body scored by Lichtenstein. Ted kept inside, punching away, and finally made Lichtenstein break ground, but he exhausted himself with the effort and was missing badly as the fight ended.

Yarosz weighed 150 1-4 pounds and his opponent 150.

BAXTER STOPS WALKER

Fighting to come back after his two defeats by Battling Gizzy and Johnny Datto, Charley Baxter, local lightweight, knocked out Tiger (Kid) Walker, highly-touted Negro, of Zanesville, O., in the fourth round of the semi-final. A right to the jaw sent Smith down outstretched on his back, satisfied to call it a night, and he rolled his head from side to side until the count was completed. He had taken a bad body beating after winning the first round with some flashy aggressiveness, and gave signs of being ready for a finishing punch long before it arrived.

Terry Waner, of the North Side, was no match for Fritzie Zivic, of Lawrenceville, and Referee Al Grayber halted the second bout in the third round as Waner went down from a right to the jaw with the crowd booing because of the unevenness of the contest.

Jimmy Gilligan, of Lawrenceville, bested Petey Jahn, of the North Side, in the six-round opener. The size of the crowd was about the same as for the first two shows in the new quarters. Charley Belanger and George Panka, heavies, box the main bout next Friday night.—HARRY KECK.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—Major league baseball stars of yesteryear are going to make a pilgrimage East next spring on a barnstorming tour.

GRINS From the GRID

By O. W. (Red) Severence

Noted Southern Football Official (Written for Associated Press.)

No. 5.

When Roy Reigels, ill-fated center of Southern California, ran the wrong way and lost the 1928 Rose Bowl game to Georgia Tech, a wise-cracking world loosed its most stinging sarcasm on his cringing shoulders.

No fewer than 10,000 persons after the game had devised a "perfect plan" that would have saved Reigels his ignominy if he had followed their method.

But a sweet-running back on Coach Billy Laval's South Carolina Gamecocks faced the same predicament last year and pulled a clever ruse that prevented the grandstand from ever knowing what happened.

Here's how Laval tells it:

"This back, whose name I'd rather not mention, broke away for a great gain on a spinner play. Suddenly, with a clear field ahead for a touchdown, he turned and ran straight out of bounds.

"At a loss to understand his actions, I jerked him from the game, thinking he had injured his head on a previous play and was 'haywire.'

"Then I realized what a clever back he really was. He said he had cleared the line of scrimmage when suddenly the awful thought struck him that he was running the wrong way. So, rather than take a chance, he decided the safest thing to do was run out of bounds. That's fast thinking."

George Flinn Cops Links Championship

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Oct. 15.—(AP.)—George H. Flinn, Jr., of Pittsburgh, won the Hot Springs Fall Golf tournament today with an 8 and 6 victory over Thomas R. Huline, of Philadelphia.

One down at the end of the first nine, Flinn opened up on the homeward stretch to card a subpar 35 and gain a decisive advantage.

In an exhibition match over the Cascades course this morning Edwin H. Vare, Jr., and his wife, Mrs. Glenna Collett Vare, defeated Fay Ingalls and Miss Helen Hicks, 6 and 5. Miss Hicks defeated Mrs. Vare yesterday for the women's championship.

DUKES VICTORS 21-6, OVER OGLETHORPE

By CHARLES J. DOYLE

The countless supporters of Duquesne University's footb team today were in a much bet mood than they were one we ago on top of their favorites' d feat at the hands of the Panth The cause of the jubilation on t Bluff was found in the convinci triumph registered by Elmer Lay den's eleven under the lights Forbes Field last night as they m a smart team from Oglethorp University. The stubborn fighte from Atlanta made the hom boys step lively through three ex citing quarters, the Dukes findin their punch in the last section the battle. The score was 21-6.

Poor handling of the ball b the Layden lads in the earl minutes of the scrap brought a lo of moaning in the Dukes' cheerin section, especially when th Georgians turned the loose pla into a quick touchdown. Th Bluffites won the toss and electe to receive the kick. Red Sullivan carried the ball to the 20-yard lin after taking the kickoff, but Full back Strutt and Sullivan turne in a couple of fumbles with a re turn of punts interspersed. Th second fumble occurred on the Du quesne one-foot line and severa of the Atlantans fell upon th ball. Metrick took the ball ove in two plays. The try for poin kick was wide of its mark.

VISITING STAR HURT

The contest was marred by a painful injury suffered one of the Oglethorpe stars. In the third quarter, Ray Walker, quarterback of the invading eleven sustained a dislocated right knee as the result of a hard tackle while the gritty safety man was running back a punt. He was carried from the field and given medical attention in the team's dressing room.

Strutt and Sullivan more than made up for their lapses and the fight grew hotter. The former drove a wedge in the Oglethorpe line in the remaining minutes of the first quarter and in the second play of the second quarter he pounded over the line for a touchdown. Sullivan then booted the ball over the uprights and the Duke's supporters cheered as they realized their club was in front.

SCARE BLUFFITES

The Southerners gave the Dukes and their backers a big scare in the third quarter. A parade of the Oglethorpe backfield men down deep into the home boys' section was a feature of this period. The invaders displayed some brilliant offense plays until they reached the 15-yard line where the locals stiffened. Failing to gain much ground in three attempts, the visitors decided to try for a field goal. Walker dropped back to the 20-yard marker, but his kick was blocked by Krankota and the Dukes went to work on their own 20-yard line.

The pent-up power of the Bluff aggregation was in evidence soon after the last period was in progress. Strutt brought the spectators to their feet with a dash of 30 yards on an off tackle play. This thrust put the ball on Oglethorpe's 40-yard line. The invaders held in this instance, forcing the Dukes to punt. The Georgians found the home defenses impregnable and returned the ball by way of the punt route. The Dukes carried the ball to the foe's 26-yard stripe and then LeLuca, from the 35-yard line threw a pass to Krangota for a touchdown. The try for point failed.

SULLY'S SMART KICK

Sullivan got off a smart kick a few minutes after the second touchdown was made. Sully booted the ball out of bounds on Oglethorpe's three-yard line. Standing behind his goal line, George tried to throw a forward pass, but the play was smeared for a safety.

The last touchdown was made about one minute before the battle ended. On top of the safety, the enemy kicked to Duquesne from the 20-yard line and the Dukes worked speedily to get the ball advanced to the 10-yard marker. DeLuca let fly with a pass and Pawlina nailed the ball as he stepped over the goal line. The try for point failed again.

The crowd was not large ss than 4,000 turning out to se e spectacle. The contest, hov ver, developed into a real fight tha was thoroughly enjoyed. Th lineup:

Trapper Tells of Hunt for Meanest of Great Cats In Malay Peninsula

In yesterday's installment the author told how "The Patsy," most ill-starred of elephants, was brought from Ceylon to California. Today he describes how the treacherous black leopards are made captive.

CHAPTER III.

Mystery and cussedness combine to make the black leopard the most fascinating of all animals. Of all the carnivora known to man he is the one about whom there is the least available information. Of only one thing are those who have had anything to do with him sure: that he is the meanest and most vicious of the great cats.

Not much of the meagre store of information that has been recorded on this little-known animal is accurate. An important zoological work—reliable in most respects—devoted a few vague lines to the black leopard, winding up by declaring him to be the most beautiful in Southern India. This is incorrect, for there are more black leopards in the Malay Peninsula than anywhere else in the world.

Only those who have had first-hand experience with the animal have any real information. Having brought back 20 black leopards to the United States, I feel qualified to discuss the subject; though I frankly admit that I am as mystified as anyone by the principal riddle connected with them. This has to do with their rapid increase in the Malay Peninsula, where today the black far outnumber the spotted leopards, and where spotted leopards are constantly producing black leopards, where the reverse is an unusual occurrence. Nowhere else is there a condition comparable to this. In India, Africa, Southern China and other places where the leopard is plentiful the tawny-colored cats have on rare occasions been known to produce a black cub and it is only in Malaya that this phenomenon has developed to the point of practically establishing a true species of black leopard. No one knows what's done it. Some scientists attribute it to the climate. Others cite it as another example of nature's protective color scheme, for the jungles of Malaya are heavier and darker than other habitats of the leopard. But nobody has a very convincing explanation to offer.

ANIMAL LIFE CHANGING

The black leopard is a "sport" that is, a spontaneous deviation from type. What there was originally in the make-up of these first black "throw-offs" in the Malay jungle that eventually resulted in the freaks outnumbering the originals is a zoological mystery that may never be solved. If the present rate of change continues, all the leopards of the Malay Peninsula will be black in a few hundred years. A strange-sounding statement to many. Not so to the student who knows that all animal life is constantly undergoing transformation and that the tapir is the only beast that, through the ages, has experienced no evolutionary change.

In 1921 I had an order for a pair of black leopards—"perfect specimens, with flawless teeth, and no blemishes of any kind" was what the agreement called for—from the New York Zoological Park, placed by Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, Curator of Mammals and Reptiles. This meant a trip to that section of the cave-country of the Malay Peninsula which lies between the northern border of Johore and Kuala Lumpur, capital of the Federated Malay States. It is here that the black leopard is most plentiful—in a queer-looking stretch of country that consists of a series of rocky formations, nestled in heavy jungle. The caves are like bubbles in the rocks, ranging all the way from openings just large enough to shelter a single animal to the famous Batu Caverns inside of which, at more than one point, a ten-story building could be comfortably stowed.

TRAPS PREPARED

This district is also ideal for pythons, gibbons, argus pheasants and small jungle-cats; and as I had quite a few orders for representatives of these species, there was plenty of work to occupy my time.

The black leopards, however, comprised my main business. Accompanied by Ali, my Number One Malay boy, I picked up a group of trappers in a native settlement. Returning to the vicinity of the caves, the boy and I put the natives to work building leopard traps at points which we designated.

A trap of this kind is built of logs. There are two compartments, one of which is baited with a young goat which bleats frantically for its mother soon after it is left in the trap, the surest way of attracting a leopard's attention. The goat is in no danger for it is in the compartment which the enemy cannot reach, but it has some anxious moments. The principle of this trap is very simple. When the leopard enters the outer compartment he kicks a string, in the process releasing a peg holding a trap door which drops from above.

We had six traps out, with a group of natives detailed to look after each one. Our efforts eventually yielded three black leopards—two males and one female. But it was slow work, one of the captives circling the trap five nights in succession before he decided to enter. This most cautious of the three was the one I was particularly anxious to get, as he was the biggest of the lot. Only once had I seen a black leopard comparable to him in size and ferocity. This was a demon that tried one day to separate me from a finger as we plowed through the China Sea rounding the north end of Luzon. I was watering him when we got into the edge of a heavy gale. The ship—the small freighter West Caddao—gave a sudden lurch, as ships will do in these treacherous waters, and I was thrown violently against the bars of the cage. The black scoundrel inside lashed out the second I hit the bars, just managing to dig a claw through my right index-finger near the palm, narrowly missing the bone. Unable to free my finger any other way, I yanked it loose. The resulting injury, of which I still bear the scar, is one of those things regarded as commonplace in the field of wild animal collecting.

CAPTIVES ENRAGED

The biggest of my three trapped blackies was so much like the rascal that tried to definger me that I found myself calling him Spitfire, the name someone had given the other. If anything, Spitfire II, was a little bigger than his predecessor, which means that he weighed about 165 pounds. Most full-grown males range from 125 to 150 pounds. The females run from 90 to 100. Which is another way of saying that black leopards are about the same size as the spotted variety. While on the subject of spots it might be well to point out the curious fact that beneath his ebony coat the black leopard is also spotted, although these spots can be seen only in a very bright light.

My three trapped prizes were in anything but a peaceful frame of mind. They plunged about wildly inside the log enclosures, emitting bloodcurdling snarls of rage. As I watched their performance I couldn't help recalling the despairing shrugs of animal trainers of my acquaintance whenever the subject of black leopards came up. All of them agreed that it was futile to attempt to tame this most diabolical of cats. The demons didn't want to be tamed. And besides it was too dangerous. Handling lions and tigers was easy by comparison.

STRIVES FOR FREEDOM

To my knowledge, the only man who ever succeeded in training a black leopard for an animal act was Louis Roth, now chief trainer for the Luna Park Zoo in Los Angeles which supplies most of the animals that appear in the movies. This was one I had sold to the Al G. Barnes Circus, which Roth then served as trainer. Louis will tell you himself, however, that the specimen was one that I delivered before it was full-grown and that he started practicing his persuasive arts on it before it had a chance to develop its full quota of mean traits.

Getting the trapped trio into cages was no easy job. This was done in each case by placing an open cage against the trap and driving the prisoner in with poles after the trap door had been raised.

Spitfire II was by far the toughest of the three to handle. Two or three times he bit off the end of the stick with which he was being prodded, hurling himself upon it with all the savagery in his make-up, and insisting with every fiber of his being that he had no intention of giving up his freedom.

The cages employed were the native variety, consisting of logs doweled and lashed together with rattan. Not a single nail is used in making these containers. Spitfire II kept up a terrific rumpus even after we got him caged, and he worked away with claws and teeth at the lashings until we had to reinforce and double each rattan strip to prevent his tearing the box to pieces.

DAKOTA TEAM BACKS COACH

CINCINNATI, O., Oct. 15.—(AP.)—The University of South Dakota football team voted here last night to stand squarely behind Coach Stanley G. Backman, whose removal was reported to have been demanded in a petition presented to the president of the school. The team is here to play the University of Cincinnati.

Backman declined to comment until he has conferred with the university board of athletics.

Eddie Dunn, captain, said he and his teammates had "ironed out" the matter in a conference. He further said the president of the school told them by long-distance telephone yesterday that no petition had been presented and that "the situation had been grossly exaggerated."

Some members of the team said a few players at home were disgruntled because a player who had not been in training as long as they was brought on the trip. It was explained the player was a halfback whom Coach Backman sorely needs for tomorrow night's game.

LOCAL HORSES FALL IN MEET

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa., Oct. 15.—Red Fire, owned by Mrs. George McNary, and the horse that won the Western Pennsylvania hunts cup at Greensburg last Wednesday, fell in the fourth race of the Scavas Gendarme's steeplechase at the Gendarme Miles farm here yesterday and failed to place. Bandmaster, owned by George Davison, of Pittsburgh, also fell and was voluntarily ruled out of the race.

Tip Toe, owned by Lieut. J. E. McCreight, of this city, with Redding up, captured first money, $175, after Windsor, a horse of the Scava Gendarme stables here, which was leading the race, refused the last jump on the three-and-one-half-mile course.

In the first race, a dash of one mile, Blue Fish, owned by Mrs. J. C. Hamilton, of Warrenton, Va., placed first and won $60. Hamilton's Rienzi took second money, with The Code, owned by Bert Cence, of Mundy's Corners, third.

The second race, over brush, on a course of approximately two miles, Giroflee, owned by Bliss Flaccus, of Pittsburgh, grabbed first prize of $60, finishing about 100 yards ahead of the second horse, Renzi, owned by J. C. Hamilton. Uncle Bing, of the Gendarmes stable here, took third. A crowd of about 500 persons witnessed the races.

No Share for Rajah, Judge Landis Rules

CHICAGO, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—Baseball Commissioner K. M. Landis yesterday revealed he has written to Rogers Hornsby, deposed manager of Chicago's National League Champion Cubs, advising him he is not eligible for a share in the world series split.

The club members ignored Hornsby in splitting up the pool, and the latter protested to Landis that he was entitled to a share.

The decision was based on a world series rule that a player not eligible to participate in the series shall not receive a split. Hornsby was released in August, making him ineligible.

Landis told the Rajah he would be glad to hear from him in case he knew of any way in which he could be declared in.

Prep Gridder Learns Rule During Game

The new football rule which says that the ball is dead if any part of the carrier save his hands or feet touches the ground was invoked in the opener at Salem (Mass.) High School as the home eleven defeated Cambridge Latin.

In trying for the point after touchdown a Salem player knelt, then arose and threw a forward pass.

"Nothing doing," was the official ruling.

PITT IN FRONT IN NATION'S GRID CARD

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—Pitt and Army in the East, Michigan and Ohio State, Purdue and Wisconsin in the Midwest, and Tulane-Vanderbilt and Tennessee-Alabama in the South, these were the high spots in the national football slate today.

Sectional, and in some cases national, championship hopes hinged upon the outcome of these battles.

With the same passing combination of Paul Reider and Warren Heller that baffled the Army last year, Pitt was a well-defined favorite over the Cadets in their big clash at West Point although there seemed no doubt whatever that Maj. Ralph I. Sasse had developed an adequate defense for any Panther aerial bombardment.

TULANE IMPRESSIVE

Michigan and Purdue, outstanding contenders now for the Big Ten title, faced the prospect of heavy going today. Ohio State usually has saved its best football to flash at Michigan's expense and Dr. Clarence Spears' Wisconsin outfit apparently packs the power necessary to test Purdue to the limit.

Likewise Tulane, defending champion, and Tennessee were favored to repeat last year's victories over Vanderbilt and Alabama, but there would be no real cause for great surprise should the result be reversed in each instance.

MANY BIG GAMES

Sharing interest with Pitt and Army in the East were the Cornell-Princeton, Dartmouth-Penn, Colgate-Lafayette and New York University-Georgetown contests, all of which had a bearing on the mythical Eastern championship situation.

"THIS lion hunting is quite all right in its way," quoth the Epicure. "But my dear Rajah, when you want to see some real lions, come to The Warwick in New York! There, social, literary and dramatic lions gather... lured by the famed continental cuisine of The Warwick, the luxurious comfort of the spacious residential suites."
"Incidentally, my dear Rajah, the rates are so modest that you'd best make your reservations quickly. I can promise you a memorable New York visit."

VALENTINE

Captivating Story of a Shy Girl Rushed Into Love

By HAZEL LIVINGSTON

Val Contemplates Divorce, Tells Joe She Won't Return to Him

CHAPTER XLVIII.

Morning of another day. Val and Millie were having breakfast together. Millie poured herself another cup of coffee, handed Val a crumpled yellow paper. "I may as well show it to you," she said.

Val read it, turned her large, questioning eyes on her mother.

"The answer," Millie said, "is no."

"But, Millie—"

"I simply haven't got the money. I won't have my next month's allowance from the court until the 15th, and then I won't have a cent more than I need. I'm not living in this dump because I like it, you know. Besides, I think Julia has great, big nerve! Tells you that there is nothing the matter, and then wires me for money. What does she think I am, a bank?"

Val went for a walk to think things over. Aunt Julia must be almost desperate. She wouldn't try to borrow from Millie unless everything else had failed.

Aunt Julia had always had enough money to live on . . . funny what happened to it . . . Well, there was just one thing to do, and that was take the night train to Oakland and find out. Just like Aunt Julia to deny that she was in trouble, to spare her worry, and then put her pride in her pocket and try to borrow money to entertain her . . . But she'd fix that. She'd pay back at least some of the money that had been spent on her as a child . . .

WILL CONSIDER DIVORCE

She returned to the apartment, refreshed. Les was already there, waiting for her. Millie sighed a little, took her hat, went out.

With Lester's arm around her, her head on his shoulder, it was easy to talk. Perhaps she said more than she should have. But he listened sympathetically.

"I know, Val . . . yes, she was always awfully good to you . . . sort of a mother to you, wasn't she?"

"So I've decided to go tonight. Maybe you'll make the reservation for me. Will you, Les?"

"Oh, don't go tonight. Send her a nice letter. That will please her. Val, when will you marry me?"

"When?" She looked at him, then laughed delighted. "Les, I love to hear you say that. Just as if . . . as if I weren't . . . as if we'd never been separated. And some day I will marry you . . . if you'll have me."

"Some day! Some day three months from now. Let's see—some day in July."

She drew back. "You mean—get a divorce now? Oh, no, not right now. I'd have to have time to think it over. And Joe expects me back. He—he—"

"What's that to us?"

SUGGESTS RENO

"But I couldn't do that to him! I'd have to tell him first and see what he thinks. It wasn't his fault. Don't you understand that, Les? There was never any reason for me to leave him except that he—that I—"

"He couldn't make you happy. I can. You're just beginning to live. You're going to know real happiness with me. There'll be no more time wasted. We lost a whole year out of our lives. That's enough. If you think you ought to go to your aunt's, go ahead. Stay a few days, a week if you want to. Then on up to Reno. I know a place where you can stay for three months, get attorney fees and everything for five hundred dollars. You can't beat that."

"Five hundred . . . I have about $700 left."

"You see? That's plenty!" He was jubilant.

She thought she'd never seen him so compelling, so vitally alive and charming. He was so much like Millie in some ways. Queer that Millie didn't like him much, and he didn't seem to like Millie.

Impulsively she asked him, "Les, why don't you like Millie?"

"Did she say I didn't?"

"No, but you seem so hostile to each other."

"I'm not hostile. But I'm not marrying your family, that's flat. It's you alone, Valentine. No mothers and no maiden aunts hanging around. Just you and I, alone!"

TO WRITE FOR MONEY

When he looked so serious and spoke so tenderly she couldn't resist him. Besides, neither Millie nor Aunt Julia would want to live with them. They were both far too independent.

"Oh, Lester, I do love you!"

"Then you go up to Oakland and see your old maid aunt, and then on to Reno!"

"I'll have to ask Joe to send my money."

"Will he know—suspect, what you want it for?"

"Lester! I wouldn't do it without telling him!"

"Now, Val, don't be quixotic. Whose money is it, yours or his?" Let's get this straight."

"It's mine. Money that my mother sent to Aunt Julia for me. And Aunt Julia didn't spend it. She saved it for me and gave it to me when I got married. I drew out all but about $700 when I came west, and it is just about gone. I'll wire him . . . no, I can't tell him in a wire. I'll write, and I'll wire at the same time for the money and tell him that I'm explaining by letter. He'll send it."

"You have a lot of confidence in him."

"In Joe?" Oh, yes!"

"All right. When can you start?"

"Why, I can start tonight. Joe can send the money to me at Aunt Julia's."

"Valentine, how can I let you go? Even for that short time?"

"Come, too! Come up north to see me!"

"I will if I can. But I'm expecting to go to work on a new picture at almost any time now. I'm assisting in direction."

"You're an assistant director. And I never knew it. I've never asked you what you did. Isn't that funny? I've been too busy being in love with you . . . Millie's friend is in the movies, too. Did you know that?"

"I know it's what he says."

"Isn't he?"

"No. He's just an extra, always hanging around trying to crash the gates. Living off your mother. Not a very pretty situation."

VOICES DISAPPROVAL

Val flushed, looked away. "I think it is very unkind of you to say that, Les."

"You ought to know it. Everybody else in Hollywood knows it. It's too darn bad for an old woman to make a fool of herself over a —"

"LESTER!"

"I'm sorry. Forgive me, darling. I shouldn't have said that. But I hate it on your account. And after all, there's no excuse for a woman your mother's age going around with a young kid like that."

"Oh!" she said. "Oh!" To think of anyone, anyone calling Millie, lovely Millie, old . . . that hurt more than the other thing . . .

But he took her in his arms, kissed her eyes, stroked her soft hair, made her promise to forgive him.

Late that afternoon she sent the wire, sat down to compose the long, painful letter:

"Dear Joe—

"I suppose you have been expecting this news. I know you won't care much. You may even be glad, and I won't blame you if you are. I was a failure, Joe.

Synopsis

Valentine Macfarlane is practically deserted at the age of 8 by her gay, widowed mother, Millie. She is brought up by a manhating maiden aunt, Julia, and becomes a stenographer. After a brief infatuation for the dashing Lester Sherwood, she marries a neighbor boy, Joe Carey, and goes to Minneapolis, where Joe is an architect. Pearl Neely, one of Joe's friends, visits and begins to take liberties about the apartment. Val dislikes Pearl, but says nothing. Unused to housework, Val becomes discontented. Joe tells Val his plans for the future, but she is unimpressed. Millie's husband dies. Val travels alone to California. She visits Millie and then goes to Hollywood, where she sees Lester. She hears that her Aunt Julia has lost her home. Val wants to help her aunt financially, but Millie disappears. Lester again tells Val he loves her.

Now Go On

"I think it is unkind of you to say that," said Val.

I tried, but I failed. It was all a mistake. We both know that.

"So I am not coming back. I wired tonight to ask you to send the rest of my money, for a divorce. I will go to Reno. There won't be any scandal, or any unpleasantness for you.

"Tonight I am going to Oakland on the 'Lark.' I'm worried about Aunt Julia. She seems to be badly off and I won't be comfortable until I go and see for myself.

"It was your mother who told me about it first. I saw her and her new husband at Agua Caliente. You never told me that she was married. We weren't very close to each other toward the last. I guess it was my fault. I'm sorry, Joe. I hope you will be happier next time."

Her pen stopped. A tear or two dropped. She didn't know how to sign it. Not—"with love—"

She searched through her sweater pockets for a handkerchief. She was crying in earnest now. Still weeping, she wrote: "Always your friend, Valentine," and signed the date.

On the way to the postbox she weakened. Stopped at the corner pretending to be waiting for someone.

The wire was sent. And she had given Les her word. Besides, it was what she wanted to do, and it was too late to back out.

If only she could feel that Pearl would make him happy. She'd feed him, yes. But she was so dominating, so bossy. His mother had bossed him so long, he deserved peace at last.

Well, it wasn't her affair . . . Joe liked her. He'd be glad to be free, to go to her . . .

Rapidly she turned the corner, walked the few remaining steps to the box. With her left hand she held the iron flap open, with her right she dropped in the letter.

She walked more rapidly, more light-heartedly back to Millie's apartment to pack. It was done now. The agony of uncertainty was past.

Heart of a Wife

By ADELE GARRISON

Madge Is Unable to Suppress a Mean Gratification

At my comment upon Avis Arlen's thorough enjoyment of the dance, Philip Veritzen smilingly looked over at the girl dancing with his son. His glance was casual at first, then, as I had hoped, he looked at her more intently. An instantly smothered exclamation broke from his lips, and I saw his fingers close angrily upon the table. The next instant he had brought his annoyance under control and was answering my question with suspicious warmth.

"Yes, the dear child! It is so good of you to give her this good time!"

"She will be very popular, I am sure," I said demurely, but my partisanship for Mary permitted me to enjoy unreservedly the first disapproval I had seen Philip Veritzen evince toward his dear friend's daughter, whom I knew he wished to make Noel's wife, in spite of the boy's present betrothal to Mary.

Now no one could ignore Avis' actions. She patiently was putting on a performance deliberately calculated to attract the eyes and the interest of every man in the room. I have watched dubiously much questionable dancing, but I have never seen anything quite so wanton—that is the only word I can use—as her sinuous, slinky movements, her close embrace of Noel and her glances from half-closed eyes at every one of the younger men she passed.

Mrs. Arlen was dancing with Dicky, and so thoroughly engrossed in her own pleasure, for Dicky is a marvelous dancer,

A SURPRISING MEANNESS

But I cared no whit for Mrs. Arlen's reaction, or for the opinion of the girl held by any one in the room, save Philip Veritzen. I faced a meanness in my own soul that startled me, for I knew that if it lay within my power to change Avis Arlen's actions with a word, I would not speak that word. The memory of the harsh strictures against Mary that this man had uttered hardened my heart. I wanted him to see as she was the girl with whom he had tried to supplant Mary in Noel's affection.

I had seen Avis' type before, and I shrewdly guessed that she was not much concerned with Noel for this evening. She was out to make a conquest, to establish herself as the undisputed "belle of the ball," and as her eyes furtively searched the faces of the masculine dancers I knew that she was appraising them, deciding which one was the most attractive.

That her eyes lingered longest on Ronald did not surprise me. He was decidedly the handsomest young man in the room, and besides, he was dancing with Mary, with every appearance of infatuated devotion to her. I knew that Avis, bitter at the memory of what Mary had said to her upon her first visit to our house, would welcome any opportunity of retaliation.

MADGE MUCH CONCERNED

She had been escorted to the house by Mary's betrothed husband, although I was sure that Noel had given her no fresh reason to think that his was anything but the performance of an outlined duty. Nothing would feed the malice of Avis better than to take Ronald away from Mary, who, in pursuance of our scheme to save Marion [illegible] appeared to be hanging upon every word Ronald uttered.

But Avis Arlen's actions and their effect upon Mary and Noel were of no concern to me compared with my anxiety over the outcome of the whole matter in which Marion, Charles Owen, Mary and Ronald were the chief actors. As Ronald and Mary went past us in the dance, she flashed a merry smile at us over Ronald's shoulder, but there was also a significant signaling look in her eyes that made me suddenly watchful. That something new was afoot, I guessed. I was sure of it as I saw them dancing down the room and observed Mary apparently urging something upon Ronald, in which he appeared reluctant to acquiesce.

The music shivered to a crashing finish and the dancers returned to their tables, while from the kitchen the waiters appeared with the second course of the dinner, a jellied consomme. The orchestra gave just enough time for it to be finished before tuning up again and I, watching Ronald and Mary, saw him suddenly fling out his hand in a sort of impatient surrender, then rise and cross to Avis, bending over her with an invitation to dance.

SUN-TELEGRAPH-WARNER THEATERS JUNIOR KOMIC CLUB

Members of the Arsenal Chapter of the Sun-Telegraph-Warner Theaters Junior Komic Club are going for an imaginary trip to the "Isle of Man" at today's meeting. Manager Eddie Johns and his assistant, Russell Niggle, have written a three-act musical comedy titled "All Aboard," and the cast will consist of members only.

The story of the play is written around a group of girls who have banded together with the one thought in mind that they will be "man haters" for life. They charter the good ship "Jolly," piloted by Capt. Jobes, to go on an expedition to the Isle of Man to find the treasure which is believed to have been buried by Svengali, the [illegible] maestro, whose castle is on the island.

The girls have forbidden Capt. Jobes to allow any men on the boat, except the crew and they must remain below decks while the girls take their exercise. Molly, president of the girls' club, also has forbidden all the girls to speak to any male member on board.

TWO STOWAWAYS

But, and from the looks of the script, it's a large "but;" there are two stowaways, friends of the captain on board—Snizzers and Goober. The fun begins when Snizzer catches a glimpse of Molly and falls in love with her at first sight and proceeds to make violent love to her. Molly, who started out to be a man-hater, tries hard to live up to the by-laws of the club, but, and we'll leave this part of the story for you to enjoy when you see "All Aboard."

The play gets funnier and funnier and the action faster and faster as the scene shifts to the Isle of Man, and later to the castle of Svengali. The curtain drops when everything turns out to everybody's satisfaction.

The cast: Capt. Jobes, Gresham McGuire; Molly, Bernadine Gressler; Snizzer, Russell Niggle; Goober, John Hilliard; club members, Albert Fundia, Betty Richards, Josephine Lang, Josephine Baran, Francis Kane and Shirley Berger; sailors, M. Ribich, H. Morris, S. De Lost and T. Hart.

IN THREE ACTS

Having just a limited amount of time at the regular Saturday meetings of the club, Eddie Johns, manager of the Arsenal Theater, will present the first act today and acts two and three on October 22 and 29.

"All Aboard" is the first of the winter schedule planned by Manager Johns for the entertainment of the members of the Arsenal Chapter of the Sun-Telegraph-Warner Theaters Junior Komic Club.

Waste at the Airport

The County Commissioners Should Plug the Leaks—Brief Comment on Local News Items.

*The taxpayers had hoped that when C. C. McGov-*ern came into power as chairman of the Board of County Commissioners the squandering of public money at the municipal airport would cease. It comes as a disagreeable surprise, therefore, to be informed on the strength of an auditor's report submitted to County Controller Robert G. Woodside that waste continues.

It is stated that three companies occupy offices at the airport without having signed leases, that three are occupying buildings and ground not included in their leases, and that hundreds of dollars have been disbursed unnecessarily. The County Commissioners should plug all such leaks at once, and we believe they will.

The meeting at the William Penn Hotel Thursday at which an organization was formed to work for economy in local government was attended by representatives of 18 civic and trade bodies as well as by unattached citizens. That is rather impressive evidence of the extent to which the people are stirred by municipal extravagance and high taxation.

The community owes a debt of gratitude to the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board and the Building Owners and Managers Association, which have been leaders in the movement for tax reduction. These organizations have spent much time and money in studying municipal finances, with the result that they are able to point out specifically, in almost every department of the city government, where savings can be effected.

The Board of Public Education appears to be making an earnest effort to cut its expenses to the lowest level consistent with giving the children of Pittsburgh good teaching. It reports that $650,000 has been saved so far this year through new economies. The public will be better able to judge, however, when the budget for 1933, now about to be prepared, is announced.

*In one way it is a pity there are no hot local con-*tests to be settled at the polls next month. If there were, a greater number of people would have registered. On the other hand, we probably have this apathy to thank for the fact that buildings, walls, trees, fences and posts are not defaced this year with political posters as they usually are before an election.

The County Department of Highways, Bridges and Tunnels reports that it is still engaged in removing from county property political signs that were painted and pasted in the primary campaign of more than a year ago. In some cases it has been necessary to resort to sand blasting and chiseling. It would be no more than just to make the candidates who were responsible do the work or pay the cost.

Criminal Court officials and the attorneys for the defendants deserve praise for the celerity with which cases are being handled. Sixty-one indictments were disposed of Thursday without the postponement of a single case, which is said to be unparalleled. Now if the Common Pleas Court would only clear away a year's accumulation of cases and catch up with its calendar, there would be less complaint of the law's delay.

A tablet marking the site of Logstown, an Indian village that stood about a mile below where Ambridge now stands, is to be unveiled tomorrow. We know considerable about Logstown, which seems to have been founded in the early part of the eighteenth century and was visited by Washington. Local history, prior to its founding, unfortunately is almost if not completely unknown.

The recommendation of Donald A. Cadzow, an archeologist, that the Carnegie Museum engage in an extensive investigation of local archeology has met with a sympathetic response in some quarters. It would be easier to get enthusiastic over the proposal if one could have some assurance of finding something besides bones, arrowheads, beads and pieces of crude pottery.

In Egypt, Palestine, Mesopotamia, Greece, Italy, Mexico and Peru archeological exploration brings to light buildings, inscriptions and works of art from which the history of the ancient inhabitants can be learned. Nothing of the sort has ever been unearthed in Pennsylvania, and no encouragement has been offered for believing that anything ever will be.

*Stanley P. Ashe, warden of the Western Peniten-*tiary, gives food for thought in an article in the monthly bulletin of the Pennsylvania Department of Welfare, in which he expresses the opinion that bad teeth, physical deficiencies and almost entire lack of educational opportunity have contributed in a large measure to the delinquencies of the average prison inmate.

It is hard to understand how bad teeth would make a criminal of a man. Bad teeth are supposed to be incubators in which the bacteria responsible for arthritis and other diseases are developed. Does Warden Ashe mean that they also are breeding places for infections that attack the brain and warp the character? Or is it the theory that bad teeth rob a man of self-respect and make him careless of his conduct?

The suggestion that lack of education contributes to delinquency is easier to understand. The National Education Association, which has just concluded an extensive study of crime in its relation to education, agrees with Warden Ashe, and remarks, significantly, that it costs $300 a year to keep a man in prison and less than $100 a year to keep a child in school.

The opening of the new Boston Bridge over the Youghiogheny River this week makes it pertinent to inquire what progress has been made on the other county bridge projects. You will get a good view of the condition of the new North Side-West End span in a large panoramic photograph which is to be reproduced in the Gravure Section of tomorrow's issue of the Sunday Sun-Telegraph.

*The American Weekly, to be issued as a supple-*ment with the Sunday Sun-Telegraph, will be notable for the first installment of a new serial, "Sweet Vengeance," by Marylyn Tomson, described as "the gripping story of a bad girl who wasn't really bad." Another notable feature will be the first installment of a work by Prof. Rene Thevenin, the French scientist, entitled "Fantastic Difficulties of a Journey to the Planets."

Forsaken!

The Pachyderm was grieving
To see his sweetie leaving,
Sick of his "bunk,"
She packed her trunk
And left him sadly heaving.

"Your promises were phoney"—
She spoke with acrimony—
"With knavish art
You stole my heart,
And stuffed me with boloney.

"You won me with your wooing,
And salve and ballyhooing
Of mansions fair
And jewels rare,
But there was nothing doing.

"So I have found a new love,
A charming and a true love,
And that is why
I say good-bye.
Boopoopadoop for you, love."

George E. Phair.

Still a 'Miracle Man'

By Claude G. Bowers

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic," "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

With 2,000 farmers bearing banners, "Hoover we trusted and now we're busted," marching through the streets of Des Moines as a curtain raiser, Mr. Hoover appeared later to defend himself against the common conviction of his very heavy responsibility for the human misery during his administration.

Reading the speech, one gets two impressions: One, which is an old one, that Mr. Hoover is more than a bit tricky and untenable in his statements of facts; the other that he still is convinced that the nation was as prosperous in 1928 as he thought at the time. Some have commented on the novelty in a Hoover speech of an emotional note.

But it will be observed that this emotion does not appear in reference to the 11,000,000 jobless men and their thirty million dependents who are in dire distress, with millions eating the bread of charity; nor in reference to the state of the farmers, 800,000 of whom lost their homesteads through foreclosures last year. Mr. Hoover was emotional in selfpity. And that is not impressive.

A Heavy Responsibility

Again he seeks to shift the stupidities of his administration to the outside world; seemingly incapable of understanding the part his Grundy prohibitive tariff act has played; utterly forgetful of the part he and predecessors played in the luring of the unwary into the speculative craze. He even mentions the fact that "our own speculative boom had weakened our own economic structure."

One naturally is moved to wonder when he discovered it was a "speculative boom." He did not say so in 1928; quite the contrary. When others warned that the market boom was a house of cards likely to go down at the first gust of reality, he and his administration indignantly protested against the thought. And right up to the moment of the crash his administration was issuing false statements as to business conditions; statements he and his subordinates knew to be false.

That is a very heavy responsibility which does not appear to have touched his conscience.

A Truly Hooverian Trick Statement

Nor does he comprehend the nature, even now, of the Grundy barrier he erected against foreign trade. Many would have been interested in his explanation of his amazing shift regarding the necessity for a prohibitive tariff. He spoke against it in the campaign of 1928; and in his message to the extra session, called immediately after his election to deal with the tariff, he was very explicit in saying that a "limited revision" here and there was all that was wanted.

The next the public knew he was marching a bit awkwardly under the soiled banner of Grundy, the notorious lobbyist of favored groups who had served notice that having raised a million dollars for Mr. Hoover's election his people demanded that they be given what they wanted.

In dealing with the international reaction to the erection of this stupid Chinese wall against foreign trade, he gives us a truly Hooverian trick statement, utterly unjustified by facts known to himself. His attempt to persuade the public that the other nations built barriers against our products before the Grundy act would not be startling in an irresponsible campaigner, but it is in a President. It presumes too much upon the gullibility of the public.

First came the protests from all our foreign customers—protests laid on the table of Mr. Stimson. Everyone knew this at the time because it was published in the press.

Then came the demonstrations against our blind selfishness in the streets of other nations—as at Lyons.

And then came the general movement to retaliate by closing the gates of foreign markets in our faces. The statesmen of Latin-America are moving in the direction of a trade understanding aimed at us today.

If in the light of what we now all know, Mr. Hoover is still convinced, despite the opinion to the contrary of economists, businessmen, bankers, publicists, that the Grundy barrier is commendable it is evidently time to have a change in Washington.

Nearing the Day Of Reckoning

Farmers dispossessed will find something of effrontery in Mr. Hoover's belated concern over the foreclosures of mortgages on their farms. This has been going on for six years. Even in 1928 it was a scandal. The foreclosure epidemic became worse after Mr. Hoover entered office and waved his magic wand. It constantly has grown worse ever since; and last year, as we have said, the number of foreclosures was appalling. During all these years Mr. Hoover apparently was unconcerned. His concern now is due to the approach of the day of reckoning.

Clearly he still has faith in the tariff as a panacea of all ills. In Des Moines he urged it on the farmers brushing the fact aside, as inconsequential, that the farmers have more tariff "protection" than they ever have had and along with it greater misery than they ever have known.

What Are The Facts?

But there is sheer impudence in Mr. Hoover's claim of credit, not only for everything done in reference to the panic by bipartisan action, but for measures the administration stubbornly opposed which were of Democratic origin. What could be more impudent than the claim that the administration has "mobilized a vast expansion of public construction to make work for the unemployed?" What are the facts?

The fact is that less money was appropriated for public work in 1931 than in 1930.

That the administration persistently fought all measures proposed to launch a public building program to give men work. It was standing out against it as late as last spring; and not until 11,000,000 breadwinners were on the street, and public opinion thoroughly was aroused did Hoover consent to any program approaching the adequate.

And when he did consent it was to the Wagner bill—a measure of Democratic origin which the Democrats had been supporting for a long while.

But — this bill having been passed and signed by Hoover "reluctantly" as the press reported at the time, the administration refused to put it in operation. Ten weeks—two months and a half—elapsed before the administration turned a wheel.

Weeks later, and after Wagner had hammered away at the administration in the press and in personal appeals, Ogden Mills announced that maybe in October he would see what could be done. It was only after the administration had been roundly denounced for its betrayal of the unemployed that Mr. Hoover—not two weeks ago—10 weeks late—announced that the administration would take advantage of part of the opportunity furnished. And the result is not a corporal's guard has been put to work at this late day.

"We" indeed!

Ungracious to Take All the Credit

There is much in Mr. Hoover's speech to which Democrats subscribe, and which Democrats certainly do not oppose. That which has been done for business revival has been done by bi-partisan action, and it is both smug and ungracious for Mr. Hoover to take all the credit. It smacks too much of the Hoover—"miracle man"—of 1928 who gave his party credit for radios, electrical washing machines, telephones, etc.

If Mr. Hoover still were a promoter and stock salesman and made such extravagant claims in his circular he would probably find himself in trouble.

What We Women Know

Fate is something that every woman is waiting and looking for—and every man is trying to dodge. Fate, after all, is LOVE!

The job of private secretary may not offer a girl the most liberal salary in the world—but it comes very near to affording her the most liberal education.

Girls don't faint, any more. Why should they? That little feminine ruse went out of fashion, when modern dances and petting parties came in and afforded a woman a quicker and simpler way of getting into a man's arms.

A Supreme Court judge has decided that a man has the right to rule his wife, if he supports her. And now all any husband needs is the nerve.

A good wife may be a man's guide, philosopher and friend; but a good stenographer is his smoke-screen, his shock-absorber, his watch-dog, his memory and his alibi.

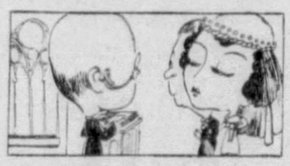
One form of megalomania is that acute inflammation of the ego, which makes a man suspect that every woman he meets will feel injured if he isn't kind enough to make love to her at least once.



A philanderer is like a stuntflier. He always tempts Fate once too often, and comes down, at last, with a crash—at the feet of the wrong woman.

The most difficult part of a wedding used to be finding the old lace and fresh orange blossoms. Now, it's finding the bridegroom.

Inspiration

Some would seek it afar
In the distant days
That gleam like a star
Through time's glamorous haze.

Some can find it alone
In the few fame has crowned,
In the light of a throne,
In the name long-renowned.

But for me it can ring
Through the song of a bird,
Or the flutter and swing
Of a willow wind-stirred.

It can drift, it can dance
With the flow of a stream;
In a friend's tender glance
It can quicken and gleam.

For some, it must fly
Like a lark, like a deer;
But for me it can lie
In the now and the here!

EUROPE DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

VENICE, Oct. 15.—The Italian Lido is a sparkling mile of water from Venice. One may journey there by gondola or motor boat. While an island, surrounded on the Venetian side by a lagoon and the other by the Adriatic, it becomes not only a shore of Venice but a slightly glorified Coney Island.

The Lido is 10 miles long with a surfeit of fat Germanic bathers by day and a dazzle of light at night. Its distinguishing mark at the moment seems in the headdress of the ladies, who wear gay colored pan-cake sized berets on one ear with chin straps. Cannes put a crimp in patronage this season.

Gondolaing over with a gondolier double for Charlie Norris, we passed two islands on the right. From one, grimly forbidding, came hideous cries. We learned it was as shuddery as it looked—an asylum for the violent male maniacs of Venice so often maddened by the scorching sun.

The other island was, in serene contrast, with minarets, buildings of warm red and flowering gardens. It has special significance as a cloisteral interlude for Lord Byron, who, over-dosed with world beguilements, became a recluse there. Legends are that Byron loved Venice because gondolas hid his club foot.

Today, Byron's Island—S. Lazzaro—is occupied by a group of scholarly Armenian monks, translating, editing and printing learned lucubrations and instructing the young in theology. We visited the room Byron occupied, saw his pen and inkstand and signed the visitors' book.

* * *

The Lido, not as alluring to me as Miami, or Palm or Coronado beaches, does provide the most pleasing vista of Venice. Also, it saves the city from sudden assaults when the Adriatic goes on a rampage. In other days, when harried souls wanted to do a little lotus-eating, they came here. But now, such beach-combers drift to the South Seas.

* * *

In poorer districts of Venice one is impressed by the grandiose touch to death among the submerged. Each passing is proclaimed on black-bordered posters in neighborhood shop windows. Unfortunates, never noticed, take on sudden importance. Emotionally florid tributes are paid their virtues, punctuated with exclamations of deep grief.

Venice to most visitors, I suppose, becomes a radiant spray of silvery water trails, moonlight, gondolas, music in an overtone of enchanting quiet. People, more than surroundings, interest me. I like the friendly simplicity of Venetians so often and more eloquently hymned. My wrist watch went on strike today and a hotel porter insisted I use his—one with a railroad train on its face, incidentally. I told him I was shortly on the move. But he shrugged indifferently. I might return it next visit. That trustfulness touched my heart.

Nor is the charm of this aquatic city altogether in canals. Outside of the Isle de la Cite section of Paris, I've found no city so delightful for haphazard prowling. To idle through the narrow calli, loiter on tiny foot-bridges, rest on benches in the poky squares and gaze dreamily at spiculous spires. Despite its tangle of criss-crossing streets, it is almost impossible to become lost. One has only to hail a gondola and say "San Marco," and in a jiffy be back to the city's true center, St. Mark's. Most streets are a succession of churches, wine shops, cafes and cheapjohn shops—a faulty hodge-podge that somehow seems trembly with expectations never realized. And I wonder if, after living here a long time, one does not long for a balsam-scented hilltop.

I've often wanted to see an Italian in native setting eat spaghetti. They show restraint in our local red inkeries. This noon, my longing was fulfilled. The luncher, first preening fierce mustachios, centered his fork in the heaping plate, gave it an expert twirl, lifted it trailing to his mouth and in what seemed several quick inhales the plate was empty. Watching, I felt giddily bloated.

* * *

Tonight at dinner, I decided to go for a helping of toy octopus, a brownish black mixture swimming in goat's milk with clots of butter bobbing about. Two spoonfuls satisfied me. Harry Silvey described its savour perfectly. On the way home, with lips pursed in wry pucker, he observed: "My mouth tastes like the Russian army had just romped through barefoot."

LISTEN, WORLD

By Elsie Robinson

HAS GOODNESS GONE OUT OF STYLE IN AMERICA?

ARE HONESTY, DECENCY, PATIENCE, LOYALTY AND UNSELFISHNESS OLD-FASHIONED?

Morris Markey wondered. Wondered just how good modern America really was. So he climbed in a flivver and rambled around for 60,000 miles, looking us over. After that he put his conclusions into a book called "THIS COUNTRY OF YOURS."

You'll be surprised when you read that book. Maybe you'll be mad. One thing sure—it will make you think. This paragraph, for example:

"THE ANCIENT VIRTUES ARE NO LONGER TAUGHT IN OUR COUNTRY. CHILDREN ARE NOT REARED TO THE STERN CHANT OF GOODNESS. THEY CLIMB HAPHAZARD INTO ADULT LIFE. THEY ARE NOT IMMORAL. THEY ARE SIMPLY WITHOUT MORALS, SAVE FOR THOSE INSTINCTIVE AND DEFENSIVE MORALS WHICH SURVIVE UNCONSCIOUSLY FROM MORE HARSHLY ORDERED GENERATIONS."

Is that true? Is goodness no longer important? Has SMARTNESS become more desirable than rightness? And is that the real reason behind the "crime wave; behind the hardness and vulgarity and greed of our present life? We've blamed it on Prohibition, or on the influx of "foreigners" with different ideals. But is the real reason THAT AMERICA DOESN'T VALUE GOODNESS ANY MORE?

We valued goodness once. That "stern chant of goodness"—do you remember it? Can you forget it! There it was, behind everything, when you and I were children. Behind all the laughter and weeping, the dreaming and rebelling; behind all the inevitable shrill clamor of Youth.

There it was, clear as a commanding voice, firm as a controlling hand, that bedrock law of fairness and decency.

PEOPLE MUST BE GOOD. That was the law. It wasn't a religious law. It had little to do with one's belief or disbelief in God. It was more like an unbreakable social code. Like good manners. Like washing your ears or raising your hat.

PEOPLE MUST BE GOOD. NORMAL PEOPLE WERE GOOD.

There was no argument about it. You might arrange the rest of your life to suit yourself, but you had no choice in this fundamental matter. Whatever else you were or were not, YOU HAD TO BE GOOD.

And if you weren't? Then there was no excuse for you. There was no substitute for goodness. You might be smart as the devil and beautiful as Venus, but if you weren't good, then you were NO GOOD. And even those who slapped you on the back had no use for you.

Nor was this "goodness" a standard which you could determine for yourself, as we do nowadays, twisting and trimming our acts to fit expediency, wisecracking with our consciences.

Goodness was a downright and established matter. You didn't make it, and your father hadn't made it before you. It wasn't a personal, peevish whim. It was something which had been built by the struggles of all these fine men and women who had gone before—bought by their sacrifices.

Goodness hadn't been any more comfortable for them than it was for you. But they had been good, no matter what it cost. They had been good so the race could get somewhere. And now they were handing the job on to you.

So there was something splendid about goodness, even if it was harsh; something that made you feel important; that gave a meaning to life.

But wasn't there many a tragic, senseless sacrifice for goodness? Wasn't it often ugly and stupid and cruel?

Yes, it was. And yet, I'm sure that insistence on goodness helped human life infinitely more than it harmed it. There was something you could bank on, in a confused and crowded world of strangers. There was a common language, a common understanding. "A gentleman's word was as good as his bond."

And there was something you could hold on to when your own judgment went woozey and your own backbone turned to water. No matter how stupid you were, or how sad, or how poor, YOU COULD ALWAYS BE GOOD.

But now? Life's easier. More exciting. Lots funnier. But I wonder if it ever achieves the dignity, the power, the ultimate peace that came through common goodness?

Isn't It So?

"Legal expenses," like charity, cover a multitude of sins.

This is a small world, but there is always room for improvement.

Honesty is still the best policy even though it does take longer to mature.
